Because our Consciences require the publishing and declaring of that express Meaning we have in taking the Test, that we be not misinterpreted to swear it in these Glosses which Men, uncharitable to it, and Enemies to us, are apt to put upon it; and because some Men ill affected to the Government, who are daily Broachers of odious and calumnious Slanders against our Persons and Ministry, are apt to deduce Inferences and Conclusions from the alleged Ambiguity of some Propositions of the Test, that we charitably and firmly believe were never intended by the Imposers, nor received by the Takers: Therefore to satisfy our Consciences, and to save our Credit from these unjust Imputations, we expressly declare that we swear the Test in this following Meaning.

1. By taking the Test we do not swear to every Proposition and Clause contained in the Confession of Faith, but only to the true Protestant Religion founded on the Word of God, contained in that Confession, as it is opposed to Popery and Fanaticism.

2. By swearing the ecclesiastick Supremacy, we swear it as we have done formerly, without any Reference to the assertory Act. We also reserve intire unto the Church, its own intrinsick and unalterable Power of the Keys as it was exercised by the Apostles, and the pure primitive Church for the first three Centuries.

3. By swearing that it is unlawful to convocate, convene or assemble in any Council, Conventions or Assemblies, to treat, consult, &c. in any Matter of State, civil or ecclesiastick, as we do not evacuate our natural Liberty, whereby we are in Freedom innocently, without Reflection upon, or derogating to Authority, or Persons intrusted with it, to discourse on any occasional Meeting of these Things; so we exclude not those other Meetings which are necessary for the Well-being and Discipline of the Church.

4. By our swearing it unlawful to endeavour any Change or Alteration in the Government either of Church or State, we mean, that it is unlawful for us to endeavour the Alteration of the specifick Government of Monarchy in the true and lineal Descent, and Episcopacy.

5. When we swear in the genuin and literal Sense, &c. we understand it so far as it is not opposite or contradictory to the foresaid Exceptions.

They were allowed to insert, after the Oath, before their Subscriptions, these Words, or to this Purpose:

We underwritten do take this Oath according to the Explanation made by the Council, approved by his Majesty's Letter. And we declare we are no further bound by this Oath.

Act of Council, Nov. 3. explaining the Test. N<sup>o</sup>. LXVII.

FOrasmuch as some have entertained Jealousies and Prejudices against the Oath and Test, appointed to be taken by all Persons in publick Trust, Civil, Ecclesiastick or Military, in this Kingdom, by the Sixth Act of his Majesty's Third Parliament, as if thereby they were to swear to every Proposition or Clause in the Confession of Faith therein mentioned, or that Invasion were made thereby upon the intrinsick spiritual Power of the Church, or Power of the Keys, or as if the present Episcopal Government of this national Church by Law established, were thereby exposed to the Hazard of Alteration or Subversion; all which are far from the Intention and Design of the Parliament's imposing this Oath, and from the genuin Sense and Meaning thereof: Therefore, his Royal Highness his Majesty's High Commissioner, and Lords of Privy Council, do allow, authorize and impower the Archbishops and Bishops to administer this Oath and Test to the Ministers and Clergy in their respective Dioceses, in this expresse Sense, that tho' the Confession of Faith, ratified in Parliament, One thousand five hundred sixty and seven, was framed in the Infancy of our Reformation, and deserves its due Praises, yet by the Test we do not swear to every Proposition or Clause therein contained, but only to the true Protestant Religion, founded on the Word of God, contained in that Confession, as it is opposed to Popery and Fanaticism. Secondly. That by the Test, or any Clause therein contained, no Invasion or Encroachment is made, or intended upon the intrinsick spiritual Power of the Church, or Power of the Keys, as it was exercised by the Apostles, and the most pure and primitive Church in the first three Centuries after Christ, and which is still reserved intirely to the Church. Thirdly. That the Oath and Test is without any Prejudice to the Episcopal Government of this national Church, which is declared by the first Act of the second Session of his Majesty's first Parliament, to be most agreeable to the Word of God, and most suitable to Monarchy, and which upon all Occasions his Majesty hath declared, he will inviolably and unalterably preserve: And appoints the Archbishops and Bishops to require the Ministers in their respective Dioceses, with the first Conveniency, to obey the Law, in swearing and subscribing the foresaid Oath and Test; with Certification, that the Refusers shall be esteemed Persons disaffected to the Protestant Religion, and to his Majesty's Government, and that the Punishment appointed by the foresaid Sixth Act of his Majesty's Third Parliament shall be impartially, and without Delay, inflicted upon them: Extracted forth of the Records of Privy Council, by

CHARLES R.

Most dear, and most intirely beloved Brother, right trusty and well beloved Cousins and Counsellors, right trusty and well beloved Counsellors, and trusty and well beloved Counsellors, We greet you well. Whereas by one of your Letters directed unto Us, bearing Date the Eighth instant, We do find that some having entertained Scruples and Prejudices against the Test, by mistaking the true Sense and Meaning thereof, and others having put false and unjust Glosses and Senses upon it, tending to defeat its excellent Design for the Security of Our Government; and that upon this account you found it necessary, by an Act of that Our Council (which We have seen) to declare its true and genuin Sense, and to allow and impower the Bishops to administer the same in this Sense to the Clergy in their respective Dioceses: We are so well pleased with that explanatory Act, that We will not delay to send you Our cheerful Approbation thereof, with Our hearty Thanks for your Zeal in Our Service upon all Occasions, especially in what relates to the Security of the Persons, Rights, Interests and Privileges of our orthodox Clergy, which We do now (as We have often done before) in a particular Manner, recommend to your Care, as a Matter wherein you may render unto Us the most acceptable Services; and therefore We do expect, that you will upon all fit Occasions Occasions give them all possible Encouragement, as these whom We have received, and will constantly shelter under Our Royal Protection, against all their Enemies. So We bid you heartily farewell.

Given at Our Court at Whitehall, the fifteenth Day of November, One thousand six hundred eighty and one, and of Our Reign the Thirty third Year.

By his Majesty's Command;

Directed thus,

MURRAY.

To Our most dear, and most entirely beloved Brother, Our right trusty and well beloved Cousins and Counsellors, Our right trusty and well beloved Counsellors, and Our trusty and well beloved Counsellors, James Duke of Albany and York, Our High Commissioner, and the Lords of Our Privy Council of Our ancient Kingdom of Scotland;

Earl of Argyle's Explanation of his Explication. N<sup>o</sup>. LXIX.

I Have delayed hitherto to take the Oath, appointed by the Parliament to be taken by the first of January next, but now being required near two Months sooner to take it, this Day peremptorily, or to refuse, I have considered the Test, and have seen several Objections moved against it, especially by many of the orthodox Clergy; notwithstanding whereof, I have endeavoured to satisfy my self with a just Explanation, which I here offer, that I may both satisfy my Conscience. and obey your Highness and your Lordships Commands in taking the Test; tho' the Act of Parliament do not simply command the Thing, but only under a Certification, which I could easily submit to, if it were with your Highness's Favour, and might be without Offence, but I love not to be singular, and I am very desirous to give Obedience in this and every Thing as far as I can; and that which clears me is, that I am confident, whatever any Man may think or say to the Prejudice of this Oath, the Parliament never intended to impose contradictory Oaths. And because their Sense (they being the Framers and Imposers) is the true Sense, and that this Test enjoyed is of no private Interpretation, nor are the King's Statutes to be interpreted but as they bear, and to the Intent they are made; therefore I think no Man, that is, no private Person, can explain it for another, to amuse or trouble him with (it may be) mistaken Glosses, but every Man as he is to take it, so is to explain it for himself, and to endeavour to understand it (notwithstanding all these Exceptions) in the Parliament, which is its true and genuin Sense. I take it therefore, notwithstanding any Scruple made by any, as far as it is consistent with it self, and the Protestant Religion, which is wholly in the Parliament's Sense, and their true Meaning, which (being present) I am sure, was owned by all to be the securing of the Protestant Religion, founded on the Word of God, and contained in the Confession of Faith, recorded Jam. VI. Parl. 1. Cap. 4. and not out of Scruple, as if any Thing in the Test did import the contrary, but to clear my self from all Cavils, as if thereby I were bound up further than the true Meaning of the Oath. I do declare, that, by that Part of the Test, that there lies no Obligation on me, &c. I mean not to bind up my self in my Station, and in a lawful Way, still disclaiming all unlawful Endeavours to wish and endeavour any Alteration, I think, according to my Conscience, to the Advantage of Church and State, not repugnant to the Protestant Religion and my Loyalty, I understand no other Thing than the Words plainly bear, to wit, the Duty and Allegiance of all loyal Subjects, and this Explanation I understand as a Part, not of the Test or Act of Parliament, but as a qualifying Part of my Oath that I am to swear, and with it I am willing to take the Test, if your Royal Highness and your Lordships allow me; or otherwise, in Submission to your Highness and the Council's Pleasure, I am content to be held as a Refuser at present.

Indictment against the Earl of Argyle. N<sup>o</sup>. LXX. 1.

Archibald Earl of Argyle,

YOU are indicted and accused, That albeit, by the common Law of all well governed Nations, and by the municipal Laws and Acts of Parliament of this Kingdom, and particularly by the 21 and by the 43 Act, Par. 2. Jam. I. and by the 83 Act, Par. 6. Jam. V. and by the 34 Act, Par. 8. Jam. VI. and the 134 Act, Par. 8. Jam. VI. and the 205 Act, Par. 14. Jam. VI. all Leasing Makers, and Tellers of them, are punishable with Tinfel of Life and Goods; likeas, by the 107 Act, Par. 7. Jam. I. it is statuted, That no Man interpret the King's Statutes, otherwise than the Statute bears, and to the Intent and Effect that they were made for, and as the Makers of them understood, and who so does in the contrary, to be punished at the King's Will. And by the 10 Act, Par. 10. Jam. VI. it is statuted, That none of his Majesty's Subjects presume to take upon him publickly to declare, or privately to speak or write any Purpose of Reproach or Slander of his Majesty's Person, Estate, or Government, or to deprave his Laws, or Acts of Parliament, or misconstrue his Proceedings, whereby any Mistaking may be moved betwixt his Highness, his Nobility and loving Subjects, in Time coming, under Pain of Death, certifying them that do in the contrary, they shall be reputed as seditious and wicked Instruments, Enemies to his Highness, and to the Commonwealth of this Realm, and the said Pain of Death shall be executed against them with all Rigour, to the Example of others;

others. And by the 2 Act, Sess. 2. Par. 1. Char. II. it is statuted, That whosoever shall, by writing, libelling, remonstrating, express, publish, or declare any Words or Sentences, to stir up the People to the Dislike of his Majesty's Prerogative and Supremacy, in Causes ecclesiastick, or of the Government of the Church by Archbishops and Bishops, as it is now settled by Law, is under the Pain of being declared incapable to exercise any Office, civil, ecclesiastick, or military, within this Kingdom, in any Time coming. Likewise, by the fundamental Laws of this Nation, by the 130 Act, Par. 8. Jam. VI. is declared, That none of his Majesty's Subjects presume to impugn the Dignity or Authority of the Three Estates, or to procure Innovation or Diminution of their Power and Authority, under the Pain of Treason; and that it is much more Treason in any of his Majesty's Subjects, to presume to alter Laws already made, or to make new Laws, or to add any Part to any Law, by their own Authority, that being to assume the legislative Power to themselves, with his Majesty's highest and most incommunicable Prerogative: Yet true it is, That albeit his sacred Majesty did not only bestow on the said Archibald Earl of Argyle, those vast Lands, Jurisdictions and Superiorities, justly forfeited to his Majesty by the Crimes of your deceased Father, preferring your Family to those who had served his Majesty against it in the late Rebellion, but also pardoned and remitted to you the Crimes of Leasing making, and misconstruing his Majesty's and his Parliament's Proceedings against the very Laws abovementioned, whereof you were found guilty, and condemned to die therefore, by the high Court of Parliament the 25 of August, 1662. and raised you to the Title and Dignity of an Earl, and being a Member of all his Majesty's Judicatures. Notwithstanding of all these, and many other Favours, you the said Archibald Earl of Argyle, being put by the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council to take the Test, appointed, by the Act of the last Parliament, to be taken by all Persons in publick Trust, you, instead of taking the said Test, and swearing the same in the plain genuin Sense and Meaning of the Words, without any Equivocation, mental Reservation, or Evasion whatsoever, you did declare against, and defame the said Act; and having, to the end you might corrupt others by your pernicious Sense, drawn the same in a Libel, of which Libel you dispersed and gave abroad Copies, whereby ill Impressions were given of the King and Parliament's Proceedings, at a Time especially, when his Majesty's Subjects were expecting what Submission should be given to the said Test; and being desired the next Day to take the same, as one of the Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury, you did give in to the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, and owned twice, in plain Judgment before them, the said defamatory Libel against the said Test, and Act of Parliament, declaring that you had considered the said Test, and was desirous to give Obedience as far as you could, whereby you clearly insinuated, that you was not able to give full Obedience. In the second Article of which Libel you declare, that you were confident the Parliament never intended to impose contradictory Oaths, thereby to abuse the People with a Belief, that the Parliament had been so impious, as really and actually to have imposed contradictory Oaths, and so ridiculous as to have made an Act of Parliament (which should be most deliberate of all human Actions) quite contrary to their own Intentions; after which you subsumed, contrary to the Nature of all Oaths, and to the Acts of Parliament abovementioned, That every Man must explain it for himself, and take it in his own Sense, by which, not only that excellent Law, and the Oath therein specified, which is intended to be a Fence to the Government, both of Church and State, but all other Oaths and Laws shall be rendered altogether useless to the Government. If every Man take the Oaths imposed by Law in his own Sense, then the Oath imposed is to no Purpose, for the Legislature cannot be sure, that the Oath imposed by them will bind the Takers according to the Design and Intent for which they appointed it, and the legislative Power is taken from the Imposers, and settled in the Taker of the Oath, and so he is allowed to be the Legislator, which is not only an open and violent Depraving of his Majesty's Laws and Acts of Parliament, but is likewise a settling of the legislative Power on private Subjects who are to take such Oaths. In the Third Article of that Paper you declare, That you take the Test, in so far only as it is consistent with it self and the Protestant Religion, by which you maliciously intimate to the People, that the said Oath is inconsistent with it self, and with the Protestant Religion, which is not only a downright Depraving of the said Act of Parliament, but is likewise a misconstruing of his Majesty's and the Parliament's Proceedings, and misrepresenting them to the People in the highest Degree, and in the tenderest Points they can be concerned, and implying, that the King and Parliament have done Things inconsistent with the Protestant Religion, for securing of which that Test was particularly intended. In the Fourth Article you do expressly declare, That you mean not, by taking the said Test, to bind up your self from wishing and endeavouring any Alteration in a lawful Way that you shall think fit for advancing of Church and State, whereby also it was designed by the said Act of Parliament and Oath, that no Man should make any Alteration in the Government of Church and State, as it is now established; and that it is the Duty of all Subjects, in humble and quiet Manner, to obey the present Government. Yet you not only declare your self, but, by your Example, you invite others, to think themselves loosed from that Obligation, and that it is free for them to make any Alteration in either, as they shall think fit, concluding your whole Paper with these Words (and this I understand as a Part of my Oath) which is a treasonable Invasion upon the royal legislative Power, as if it were lawful for you to make to your self an Act of Parliament, since he who can make any Part of an Act, may make the whole, the Power and Authority in both being the same. Of the which Crimes abovementioned you, the said Archibald Earl of Argyle, are Actor, Art and Part, which being found by the Assize, you ought to be punished with the Pains of Death, Forfeiture and Escheat of Lands and Goods, to the Terror of others to commit the like hereafter.

My Lord Justice-general, &c.

I Look upon it as the undeniable Privilege of the meanest Subject, to explain his own Words in the most benign Sense; and even when Persons are under an ill Character, the Misconstruction of Words in themselves not ill, can only reach a Presumption or Aggravation, but not any more.

But

But it is strange to alledge, as well as, I hope, impossible to make any that know me believe, that I could intend any Thing but what was honest and honourable, suitable to the Principles of my Religion and Loyalty, tho' I did not explain my self at all.

My Lord, I pray you be not offended that I take up a little of your Time, to tell you; I have from my Youth made it my Business to serve his Majesty faithfully, and have constantly, to my Power, appeared in his Service, especially in all Times of Difficulty, and have never joyned, nor complied with any Interest or Party, contrary to his Majesty's Authority, and have all along served him in his own Way, without a Frown from his Majesty these Thirty Years.

As soon as I passed the Schools and Colleges, I went to travel to France and Italy, and was abroad 1647; 1648. and till the End of 1649.

My first Appearance in the World was to serve his Majesty as Colonel in his Foot-guards, and tho', at that Time, all the Commissions were given by the then Parliament, yet I would not serve without a Commission from his Majesty, which I have still the Honour to have by me.

After the Misfortune of Worcester I continued in Arms for his Majesty's Service, when Scotland was overrun with the Usurpers, and was alone, with some of my Friends, in Arms in the Year 1652. and did then keep up some Appearance of Opposition to them; and General Major Dean coming to Argyle Shire, and planting several Garisons, he no sooner went away, but we fell upon the Garisons he had left, and, in one Day, took Two of them, and cut off a considerable Part of a Third, and carried away in all about Three hundred Prisoners. And in the End of that Year I sent Captain Schaw to his Majesty, with my humble Opinion how the War might be carried on, who returned to me with Instructions and Orders, which I have yet lying by me.

After which I joyned with those his Majesty did commissionate, and stood out till the last, that the Earl of Middleton, his Majesty's Lieutenant General, gave me Orders to capitulate, which I did without any other Engagements to the Rebels, but allowing Persons to give Bail for my living peaceably, and did, a my capitulating, relieve several Prisoners by Exchange, whereof my Lord Granard, out of the Castle of Edinburgh, was one.

It is notoriously known, that I was forfeited by the Usurpers, who were so jealous of me, that, contrary to their Faith, within Eight Months after my Capitulation, upon Pretence I kept Horses above the Value; they seized on me, and kept me in one Prison after another, till his Majesty's happy Restauration, and this only because I would not engage not to serve his Majesty, tho' there was no Oath required.

I do with all Gratitude acknowledge his Majesty's Goodness, Bounty, and Royal Favour to me, when I was pursued before the Parliament in the Year 1662. His Majesty was graciously pleased not to send me there in any opprobrious Way, but upon a bare verbal Parole, upon which I came down Post, and presented my self a Fortnight before the Day. Notwithstanding whereof I was immediately clapt up in the Castle, but having satisfied his Majesty at that Time, of my intire Loyalty, I did not offer to plead by Advocates: And his Majesty was not only pleased to pardon my Life, and to restore me to a Title and Fortune, but to put me in Trust in his Service in the most eminent Judicatories of this Kingdom, and to heap Favours upon me far beyond whatever I did, or can deserve, tho' I hope his Majesty hath always found me faithful and thankful, and ready to bestow all I have, or can have, for his Service; and I hope never hath, had, or shall have Ground to repent any Favour he hath done me. And if I were now really guilty of the Crimes libelled, I should think my self a great Villain.

The next Occasion I had to shew my particular Zeal to his Majesty's Service was in anno 1666. when the Insurrection was made, that was repress'd at Pentland Hills. At the very first the Intercourse betwixt this Place and me was stopt, so that I had neither Intelligence nor Orders from the Council, nor from the General, but upon a Letter from the now Archbishop of St. Andrews, telling me there was a Rebellion like to be in the Three Kingdoms, and bidding me beware of Ireland and Kintyre, I brought together about Two Thousand Men. I seized all the Gentlemen in Kintyre, that had not taken the Declaration, tho' I found them peaceable: And I sent a Gentleman to General Dalziel to receive his Orders, who came to him just as they were going to the Action at Pentland, and was with him in it, and I kept my Men together till his Return. And when I met with considerable Trouble from my Neighbours, rebelliously in Arms, and had Commissions both on publick and private Accounts, have I not carried dutiful to his Majesty, and done what was commanded, with a just Moderation, which I can prove under the Hands of mine Enemies, and by many infallible Demonstrations?

Pardon me a few Words. Did I not, in this present Parliament, shew my Readiness to serve his Majesty and the Royal Family, in asserting vigorously the lineal legal Succession of the Crown, and had a Care to have it express'd in the Commissions of the Shires and Burghs I had Interest in? Was I not for offering proper Supplies to his Majesty and his Successor? And did I not concur to bind the Landlords for their Tenants, altho' I was mainly concerned? And have I not always kept my Tenants in Obedience to his Majesty?

I say all this, not to arrogate any Thing for doing what was my Honour and Duty to his Majesty; but if, after all this, upon no other Grounds, but upon Words that were spoken in absolute Innocence, and without the least Design, except for clearing my own Conscience; and that are not capable of the ill Sense wrested from them by the Libel, I should be further troubled, what Assurance can any of the greatest Quality, Trust, or Innocence have that they are secure? especially considering that so many Scruples have been started, as all know, not only by many of the orthodox Clergy, but by whole Presbyteries, Synods, and some Bishops, which were thought so considerable, that an eminent Bishop took the Pains to write a Treatise, that was read over in Council, and allowed to be printed, and a Copy given to me, which contains all the Expressions I am charged for, and many more that may be stretched to a worse Sense.

Have I not shewed my Zeal to all the Ends of the Test? how then can it be imagined, that I have any sinister Design in any Thing that I have said? If I had done any Thing contrary to it all the Course of my Life, which I hope shall not be found, yet one Act might pretend to be excused by a Habit: But nothing being questioned but the Sense of Words misconstrued to the greatest Height, and stretched to imaginary Insinuations, quite contrary to my Scope and Design; and so far contrary, not only to my Sense, but my Principles; ciples, Interest and Duty, that I hope my Lord Advocate will think he hath gone too far on in his Process, and say plainly, what he knows to be Truth, by his Acquaintance with me, both in publick and private, viz. That I am neither Papist nor Fanatick, but truly loyal in my Principles and Practices.

The Hearing of this Libel would trouble me beyond most of the Sufferings of my Life, if my Innocence did not support me, and the Hopes of being vindicated of this and other Calumnies before this publick and noble Auditory.

I leave my Defences to these Gentlemen that plead for me, they know my Innocence, and how groundless that Libel is.

I shall only say, as my Life hath most of it been spent in serving and suffering for his Majesty, so, whatever be the Event of this Process, I resolve, while I breathe, to be loyal and faithful to his Majesty. And whether I live publickly, or in Obscurity, my Head, my Heart, nor my Hand shall never be wanting where I can be useful to his Majesty's Service, and while I live, and when I die, I shall pray, that God Almighty would bless his Majesty with a long, happy and prosperous Reign; and that the lineal legal Successors of the Crown, may continue Monarchs of all his Majesty's Dominions, and be Defenders of the true Primitive, Christian, Apostolick, Catholick, Protestant Religion, while Sun and Moon endure.

God save the King.

Sir George Lockhart's Plea for the Earl of Argyle. N<sup>o</sup>. LXX. 3.

Sir George Lockhart, for the Earl of Argyle, alledgeth, That the Libel is not relevant, and whereupon he sought to be put to the Knowledge of an Inquest. For,

It is alledged in the general, That all criminal Libels, whereupon any Person's Life, Estate, and Reputation can be drawn in question, should be founded upon clear, positive, and expresse Acts of Parliament, and the Matter of Fact, which is libelled to be the Contravention of those Laws, should be plain, clear, and direct Contraventions of the same, and not argued by way of Implications and Inferences: Whereas in this Case, neither the Acts of Parliament founded upon and libelled, can in the least be the Foundation of this Libel: Nor is the Explication which is pretended to be made by the Pannel, at the Time of the taking of his Oath, (if considered) any Contravention of those Laws; which being premised, and the Pannel denying the Libel, as to the whole Articles and Points therein contained, it is alledged in special:

That the Libel, in so far as it is founded upon the 21 Chap. Stat. 1. Robert I. and upon 83 Act, Parl. 6. James V. the 43 Act, Parl. 2. James I. and upon the 83 Act, Parl. 10. James V. and upon 84 Act, Parl. 8. James VI. and upon the 10 Act, Parl. 10. James VI. and upon the 2 Act, Parl. 1. Sess. 2. of his sacred Majesty, and inferring thereupon, That the Pannel, by the pretended Explication, given in by him to the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, as the Sense of the Oath he had taken, doth commit the Crime of Leasing-making, and depraving his Majesty's Laws: The Inference and Subsumption is most unwarrantable, and the Pannel, tho' any such Thing were acknowledged or proved, can never be found guilty of contravening these Acts of Parliament, in respect it is evident, upon Perusal and Consideration of these Acts of Parliament, that they only concern the Cause of Leasing-making, tending to Sedition, and to beget Discord betwixt his Majesty and his Subjects, and the Dislike of his Majesty's Government, and the Reproach of the same. And the said Laws and Acts of Parliament were never understood or libelled upon in any other Sense; and all the former Acts of Parliament, which relate to the Crime of Leasing-making in general Terms, and under the Qualification foresaid, as tending to beget Discord betwixt his Majesty and his Subjects, are explained and fully declared, as to what is the true Meaning and Import thereof, by the 134 Act, Parl. 8. James VI. which relates to the same Crime of Leasing-making, and which is expressly described in these Terms, to be wicked and licentious, publick and private Speeches, and untrue Calumnies, to the Disdain and Contempt of his Majesty's Council and Proceedings, and to the Dishonour and Prejudice of his Highness and his Estate, stirring up his Highness's Subjects to Misliking and Sedition, and Unquietness; which being the true Sense and Import of the Acts of Parliament made against Leasing-makers, there is nothing can be inferred from the Pannel's alledged Explication, which can be wrested or construed to be a Contravention of these Laws: In respect,

First. It is known by the whole Tenor of his Life, and graciously acknowledged by his sacred Majesty, by a Letter under his Royal Hand, that the Pannel did ever most zealously, vigorously, and faithfully promote and carry on his Majesty's Service and Interest, even in the worst and most difficult Times; which is also acknowledged by a Pass under the Earl of Middleton's Hand, who had then a special Commission from his Majesty, for carrying on his Majesty's Service in this Kingdom, as Lieutenant-general under his Majesty; and by a Letter under the Earl's Hand, of the Date , both which do contain high Expressions of the Pannel's Loyalty, and of the great Services he had performed for his Majesty's Interest; and his Majesty, as being conscious thereof, and perfectly knowing the Pannel's Loyalty, and his Zeal and Faithfulness for his Service, did think fit to entrust the Pannel in Offices and Capacities of the greatest Trust in the Kingdom: And it is a just and rational Presumption, which all Laws make and infer, That the Words and Expressions of Persons, who, by the Tenor and Course of their Lives, have expressed their Duty and Loyalty to his Majesty's Interest, are ever to be interpreted and understood in meliolem partem; and, by way of Implication and Inference, to conclude and infer Crimes from the same, which the Ufer of such Words and Expressions never meant or designed, is both unreasonable and unjust.

2. As the foresaid Acts of Parliament made against Leasing-makers, and Depravers of his Majesty's Laws, only proceed in the Terms aforesaid, where the Words and Speeches are plain, tending to beget Discord between the King and his Subjects, and to the Reproach and Dislike of his Government, and when the same are spoke and vented in a subdolous, pernicious, and fraudulent Manner, so they never were, nor can be un-understood to proceed in the Case of a Person, offering, in the Presence of a publick Judicature, (whereof he had the Honour to be a Member) his sincere and plain Meaning and Apprehension of what he conceived to be the true Sense of the Act of Parliament imposing and enjoining the Test; there being nothing more opposite to the Acts of Parliament made against Leasing-making, and venting and spreading abroad the same upon seditious Designs, than the foresaid plain and open Declaration of his Sense and Apprehension, what was the Meaning of the said Act of Parliament: And it is of no Import to infer any Crime, and much less any of the Crimes libelled, albeit the Pannel had erred and mistaken in his Apprehension of the Act of Parliament. And it were a strange Extension of the Act of Parliament made against Leasing-makers, requiring the Qualifications foresaid, and the Acts against depraving his Majesty's Laws, to make the Pannel or any other Person guilty, upon the Mistakes and Misapprehensions of the Sense of the Laws, wherein Men may mistake and differ very much, and even eminent Lawiers and Judges; so that the Acts of Parliament against Leasing-making, and depraving his Majesty's Laws, can only be understood in the express Terms and Qualifications foresaid. Likeas, it neither is libelled, nor can be proven, that the Pannel before he was called and required by the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council to take the Oath, did ever, by Word or Practice, use any reproachful Speeches of the said Act of Parliament, or of his Majesty's Government; but being required to take the Oath, he did humbly, with all Submission, declare what he apprehended to be the Sense of the Act of Parliament enjoining the Test, and in what Sense he had Freedom to take the same.

3. The Act of Parliament enjoining the Test, does not enjoin the same to be taken by all Persons whatsoever, but only prescribes it as a Qualification, without which Persons could not assume or continue to act in publick Trust; which being an Oath to be taken by so solemn an Invocation of the Name of almighty God, it is not only allowable by the Laws and Customs of all Nations, and the Opinion of all Divines and Casuists, Popish or Protestant, but also commended, that where a Party has any Scrupulosity, or Unclearness in his Conscience, as to the Matter of the Oath, that he should exhibit and declare the Sense and Meaning in which he is willing and able to take the Oath. And it is not at all material, whether the Scruples of a Man's Conscience, in the Matter of an Oath, be, in themselves, just or groundless, it being a certain Maxim, both in Law and Divinity, that conscientia, etiam erronea, ligat. And therefore, tho' the Pannel had thought fit, for the clearing and Exoneration of his own Conscience, in a Matter of the highest Concern as to his Peace and Repose, to have expressed and declared the express Sense in which he could take the Oath, whether the said Sense was consistent with the Act of Parliament or not; yet it does not in the least import any Matter of Reproach or Reflection upon the Justice or Prudence of the Parliament in imposing the said Oath, but allenarly does evince the Weakness and Scrupulosity of a Man's Conscience, who neither did, nor ought to have taken the Oath, but with an Explanation that would have saved his Conscience to his Apprehension; otherwise he had grossly sinned before God, even tho' it was conscientia errans: And this is allowed and prescribed by all Protestant Divines, as indispensably necessary, and was never thought to import any Crime, and is also commended even by Popish Casuists themselves, who tho' they allow, in some Cases, of mental Reservations and Equivocations, yet the express Declaration of the Sense of the Party is allowed and commended, as much more ingenuous; and tutius remedium conscientia ne illaqueetur, as appears by Bellarmino de juramento, and upon the same Title de interpretatione juramenti. And Lessius that famous Casuist, de justitia & jure, dubitatione 8, 9. utrum si quis salvo animo aliquid juramenta promittat, obligetur, & quale peccatum hoc sit. And which is the general Opinion of all Casuists, and all Divines, as may appear by Amesius, in his Treatise de conscientia, Sanderson de juramento, pralectione secunda. And such an express Declaration of the Sense and Meaning of any Party, when required to take an Oath, for no other End but for the clearing and Exoneration of his own Conscience, was never in the Opinion of any Lawier, or any Divine, construed to be the Crime of Leasing-making, or of defamatory Libels, or depraving of publick Laws, or reproaching or misconstruing of the Government, but the contrary. By the universal Suffrage of all Protestant Divines, there is expressly required, in Cases of a scrupulous Conscience, an Abhorrence and Detestation of all reserved Senses, and of all Amphibologies and Equivocations, which are in themselves unlawful and reprobate, upon that unanswerable Reason, that juramentum being the highest Act of Devotion and Religion, in eo requiritur maxima simplicitas, and that a Party is obliged, who has any Scruples of Conscience, publickly and openly to clear and declare the same.

4. Albeit it is not controverted, but that a Legislator imposing an Oath, or any publick Authority, before whom the Oath is taken, after hearing of the Sense and Explication which a Person is willing to put upon it, either reject or accept of the same, if it be conceived not to be consistent with the genuin Sense of the Oath; yet tho' it were rejected, it was never heard of, or pretended, that the offering of a Sense does import a Crime, but that notwithstanding thereof, habetur pro recusante, and as if he had not taken the Oath, and to be liable to the Certification of Law, as if he had been a Refuser.

5. The Pannel having publickly and openly declared the Sense in which he was free to take the Oath, it is offered to be proved, that he was allowed, and did accordingly proceed to the taking of the Oath, and did thereafter take his Place, and sit and vote during that Sederunt of Privy Council; so as the pretended Sense and Explication, which he did then emit and give, can import no Crime against him.

6. It is also offered to be proved, that before the Pannel was required to take the Oath, or did appear before his Royal Highness, and Lords of Privy Council, to take the same, there were a great many Papers spread abroad from Persons and Ministers of the orthodox Clergy, and, as the Pannel is informed, some thereof presented to the Bishops of the Church, in the name of Synods and Presbyteries, which did, in down-right Terms, charge the Test and Oath with alledged Contradictions and Inconsistencies. And, for Satisfaction whereof, some of the learned and reverend Bishops of the Church did write a learned and satisfying Answer, called, A Vindication of the Test, for clearing the Scruples, Difficulties and Mistakes that were objected against it. And which Vindication and Answer was exhibited, and read before the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, and allowed to be printed, and from which the Pannel argues.

1mo. That it neither is, nor can be pretended in this Libel, that the alledged Explication wherein he did take the Oath, does propose the Scruples of his Conscience in these Terms, which were proposed by the Authors of these Objections, which do flatly and positively assert, that the Oath and Test do contain Matters of Inconsistency and Contradiction, whereas all that is pretended in this Libel, with the most absolute Violence lence can be put upon the Words, is arguing Implications and Inferences, which neither the Words are capable to bear, nor the Sincerity of the Earl's Intention and Design, nor the Course of his bypast Life can possibly admit of. And yet none of the Persons, who were the Authors of such Papers, were ever judged or reputed criminal or guilty, and to be prosecuted for the odious and infamous Crimes libelled, of Treason, Leasing-making, Perjury, and the like.

2<sup>do</sup>. The Pannel does also argue, from the said Matter of Fact, that the alledged Explication libelled, can neither in his Intention and Design, nor in the Words infer and import any Crime against him, because, before his being required, or appearing to take the Oath, there were spread abroad such Scruples and Objections by some of the orthodox Clergy and others, so that the Earl can never, in any Sense, be construed in his Explication, wherein he took the Oath, to have done it animo infamandi; and to declaim against the Government, for the Scruples and Objections that were spread abroad by others, were a fair and rational Occasion why the Earl, in any Sense or Explication which he offered, might have said, that he was confident the Parliament never intended to impose contradictory Oaths; and this is so far from importing the Insinuation and Inference made by the Libel, that thereby the Parliament were so impious as to impose contradictory Oaths, as on the contrary, considering the Circumstances forementioned, that there were Papers spread abroad, insinuating, that there were Inconsistencies and Contradictions contained therein, the said Expression was an high Vindication of the Honour and Justice of the Parliament against the Calumnies and Misrepresentations which were cast upon it, and was also a just Rise for the Pannel, for the clearing and Exoneration of his own Conscience, in the various Senses and Apprehensions which he found were going abroad, as to the said Test, humbly to offer his Sense in which he was clear, and satisfied to take the Oath.

7. To the Libel, in so far as it is founded upon the Act of Parliament, viz. Act 130. Par. 8. Jam. VI. declaring, That none should presume to impugn the Dignity or Authority of the Three Estates of Parliament, or procure any Invasion or Diminution thereof, under the Pain of Treason; as also, in so far as it is pretended in the Libel, that the Pannel, by offering the Sense and Explication libelled, has assumed the legislative Power, which is incommunicable, and has made a Law, or a Part of a Law.

It is answered, The Libel is most groundless and irrelevant, and against which the Act of Parliament is opposed, which is so plain and evident, upon the Reading thereof, that it neither is nor can be subject to the least Cavillation, and the plain Meaning whereof is nothing else, but to impugn the Authority of Parliaments, as if the King and Parliament had not a legislative Power, or were not the highest Representative of the Kingdom, or that any of the Three Estates were not essentially requisite to constitute the Parliament. And besides, there is nothing more certain, than that the Occasion of the said Act its being made, was in relation to the Bishops and Clergy, and there is nothing in the pretended Explanation, that can be wrested to import the least Contravention of the said Act, or to be an Impugning of the Three Estates of Parliament, or a Seeking any Innovation therein. And it is admired with what Shadow of Reason it can be pretended, that the Pannel has assumed a legislative Power, or made a Part of a Law, seeing all that is contained in the alledged Explication libelled, is only a Declaration of the Earl's Sense, in which he was satisfied to take the Oath, and so respected none but himself, and for the clearing of his own Conscience, which justly indeed the Word of God calls a Law to himself, without any Inroaching upon the legislative Power. And where was it ever debated, but that a Man in the taking of an Oath, if, as to his Apprehensions, he thought any Thing in it deserved to be cleared, might declare the same; or that his exhibiting, at the Time of the taking of the Oath, his Sense and Explication, wherein he did take it, was ever reputed or pretended to be the assuming of a legislative Power, it being the universal Practice of all Nations to allow this Liberty? and which Sense may be either rejected or accepted, as the Legislator shall think fit, importing no more but a Party's private Sense, for the Exoneration of his own Conscience. And as to that Member of the Libel, founded upon Act 19. Par. 3. Queen Mary, it contains nothing but a Declaration of the Pain of Perjury, and there is nothing in the Explication libelled, which can in the least be inferred as Contravention of the said Act, in respect, if it should be proved, that the Pannel, at the Time of the taking of the Oath, did take it in the Words of the said Explication, as his Sense of the Oath, it is clear, that the Sense being declared at the Time of taking the Oath, and allowed as the Sense wherein it was taken, the Pannel can only be understood to have taken it in that Sense. And altho' publick Authority may consider whether the Sense given by the Pannel does satisfy the Law or not, yet that can import no more, tho' it was found not to satisfy, but to hold the Pannel as a Refuser of the Oath; but it is absolutely impossible to infer the Crimes of Perjury upon it, being, as is pretended by the Libel, the Pannel did only take it with the Declaration of the Sense and Explication libelled.

8. As the Explication libelled does not at all import all, or any of the Crimes contained in the said Libel, so, by the common Principles of all Law, where a Person does emit Words for the clearing and Exoneration of his own Conscience, altho' there were any Ambiguity, or Unclearness, or Involvedness in the Tenor or Import of the Expressions or Words, yet they are ever to be interpreted interpretatione benigna & favorabili, according to the general Principles of Law and Reason. And it never was, nor can be refused to any Person to interpret, and put a congruous Sense upon his own Words, especially the Pannel being a Person of eminent Quality, and who hath given great Demonstration and undeniable Evidences of his fixt and unalterable Loyalty to his Majesty's Interest and Service, and, at the Time of emitting the said Explication, was invested and intrusted in publick Capacities. And it is a just and rational Interpretation and Caution, which Sanderfon, that judicious and eminent Casuist, gives Prælect. 2. that dicta & facta principum, parentum, rectorum, are ever to be looked upon as benigna interpretationis, and that dubia sunt interpretanda in meliorem partem. And there is nothing in the Explication libelled, which, without Detortion and Violence, and in the true Sense and Design of the Pannel, is not capable of this benign Interpretation and Construction, especially, Respect being had to the Circumstances wherein it was emitted and given, after a great many Objections, Scruples and alledged Inconsistencies, were owned, vented and spread abroad, which was a Rise to the Earl, for using the Expressions contained in the pretended Declaration libelled.

9. These Words whereby it is pretended the Pannel declares, he was ready to give Obedience as far as he could. 1<sup>mo</sup>. Do not in the least import, that the Parliament had imposed any Oath which was in it self unlawful, but only the Pannel's Scrupulosity and Unclearness in Matter of Conscience. And it is hoped it cannot be a Crime, because all Men cannot go the same Length. And if any such Thing were argued, it might be argued gued Ten times more strongly, from a simple Refusing of the Oath, as if any Thing were enjoined, which were so hard, that it is not possible to comply with it: And yet such Implications are most irrational and inconsequential, and neither in the Case of a simple and absolute Refusing of the Oath, nor in the Case of an Explication of the Party's Sense, wherein he is willing to take the Oath, is there any Impeachment of the Justice and Prudence of the Legislator who imposeth this Oath, but singly a Declaration of the Scrupulosity and Weakness of the Party, why he cannot take the Oath in other Terms; and such Explications have been allowed by the Laws and Customs of all Nations, and are advised by all Divines of whatsoever Principles, for the Solace and Security of a Man's Conscience.

2<sup>do</sup>. As to that Point of the Explication libelled, That I am consistent the Parliament never intended to impose contradictory Oaths; it respects the former Answer, which, considering the plain and downright Objections that were spread abroad, and made against the Oath, as containing Inconsistencies and Contradictions, was an high Vindication of the Justice and Prudence of the Parliament.

3<sup>tio</sup>. As to these Words, And therefore I think no Body can explain it but for himself. The plain and clear Meaning is nothing else, but that the Oath being imposed by Act of Parliament, it was of no private Interpretation; and that therefore every Man, who was to take it, behoved to take it in that Sense, which he apprehended to be the genuine Sense of the Parliament: And it is impossible, without impugning common Sense, that any Man could take it in any other Sense, it being as impossible to see with another Man's Eyes, as to see with his private Reason. And a Man's own private Sense, and Apprehension of the genuine Sense, was the only proper Way wherein any Man could rationally take the Oath.

And as to these Words, That he takes it as far as it is consistent with it self and the Protestant Religion, the Pannel neither intended nor exprest more, but that he did take it as a true Protestant, and he hopes all Men have taken it as such.

And as to that Clause wherein the Pannel is made to declare, That he does not bind up himself in his Station, in a lawful Way, to wish and endeavour any Alteration, he thinks, to the Advantage of Church or State, not repugnant to the Protestant Religion and his Loyalty.

It is answered. There is nothing in this Expression that can import the least Crime, or give the least Umbrage for any Mistake: For,

1. It is most certain, it is impossible to elicit any such Thing from the Oath, but that it was the Intention of the Parliament, that Persons, notwithstanding of the Oath, might concur in their Stations, and in a lawful Way, in any Law, to the Advantage of Church and State: And no rational Man ever did or can take the Oath in other Terms, that being contrary to his Allegiance and Duty to his sacred Majesty and Prince.

2. There is nothing in the said Expression which does touch in the least Point, at any Alteration in the Fundamentals of Government, either in Church or State, but, on the contrary, by the plain and clear Words and Meaning, rather for its Perpetuity, Stability and Security, the Expression being cautioned to the utmost Scrupulosity, as that it was to be done in a lawful Manner, that it was to be to the Advantage of Church or State, that it was to be consistent with the Protestant Religion, and with his Loyalty, which was no other but the Duty and Loyalty of all faithful Subjects, and which he has signally and eminently expressed upon all Occasions: So that how such an Expression can be drawn to import all, or any of the Crimes libelled, passeth all natural Understanding.

And as to the last Words, This I understand as a Part of my Oath, which is libelled to be a treasonable Invasion, and assuming of the legislative Power; it is answered, it is most unwarrantable, and a Party's declaring the Sense and Meaning, in which he was free to take an Oath, does not at all respect or invade the legislative Power, of which the Pannel never entertained a Thought, but has an absolute Abhorrence and Detestation of such Practices: But the plain and clear Meaning is, that the Sense and Explication was a Part of his Oath, and not of the Law imposing the Oath, these being as distant as the Two Poles; and which Sense was taken off the Earl's Hands, and he accordingly was allowed to take his Place at the Council-board, and therefore repeats the former general Defences.

And to convince the Lords of Justiciary, that there is nothing in the pretended Explication libelled, which can be drawn to import any Crime, even of the lowest Size and Degree, and that there is no Expression therein contained, that can be detorted or wrested to import the same, is evident from the learned Vindication published and spread abroad, by an eminent Bishop, and which was read in the Face of the Privy Council, and does contain Expressions of the same Nature, and of the same Import contained in the pretended Explication libelled, as the Ground of this Indictment libelled against the Pannel. And it is positively offered to be proven, that these Terms were given in, and read, and allowed to be printed, and (without taking Notice of the whole Tenor of the Vindication, which the Lords of Justiciary are humbly desired to peruse and consider, and compare the same with the Explication libelled) the same acknowledgeth, that Scruples had been raised and spread abroad against the Oath; and also acknowledgeth, that there were Expressions therein that were dark and obscure; and likewise takes Notice, that the Confession, ratified Par. 1. Jam. VI. to which the Oath relates, was hastily made, and takes Notice of that Authority that made it; and acknowledges in plain Terms, that the Oath does not hinder any regular Endeavour to regulate or better the established Government, but only prohibits irregular Endeavours and Attempts to invert the Substance or Body of the Government; and does likewise explain the Act of Parliament anent his Majesty's Supremacy, that it does not reach the Alteration of the external Government of the Church. And the Pannel and his Procurators are far from insinuating in the least, that there is any Thing in the said Vindication, but what is consistent with the exemplary Loyalty, Piety and Learning of the Writer of the same. And tho' others perhaps may differ in their private Opinion, as to this Interpretation of the Act of the same. And tho' others perhaps may differ in their private Opinion, as to that Point, that such Mistake were upon the Interpretation of the Writer, or the Sense of others, as to that Point, that such Mistakes or Misapprehensions, upon either Hand, should import or infer against them the Crimes of Leasing-making, or depraving his Majesty's Laws; for if such Foundation were laid, Judges and Lawiers had a dangerous Imployment, there being nothing more ordinary than to fall into Differences and Mistakes of the Sense and Meaning of the Laws and Acts of Parliament: But such Crimes cannot be inferred, but with and under the Qualifications abovementioned, of malicious and perverse Designs, joyned with licentious, wicked and reproachful Speeches spread abroad to move Sedition and Dislike of the Government : And the said Laws were never otherwise interpreted, nor extended in any Case ; and therefore the Explication libelled, neither as taken complexly, nor in the several Expressions thereof, nor in the Design of the Ingiver of the same, can, in Law, import against him all or any of the Crimes libelled.

In like Manner the Pannel conjoyns, with the Grounds abovementioned, the Proclamation issued forth by his Majesty's Privy Council, which acknowledges and proceeds upon a Narrative, that Scruples and Jealousies were raised and spread abroad against the Act of Parliament enjoining the Test, for clearing and Satisfaction whereof, the said Proclamation was issued forth, and is since approved by his sacred Majesty.

HIS Majesty's Advocate, for the Foundation of his Debate, does represent, that his Majesty, to secure the Government from the rebellious Principles of the last Age, and the unjust Pretexes made use of in this, from Popery and other Jealousies, as also to secure the Protestant Religion and the Crown, called a Parliament ; and that the great Security resolved on by the Parliament was this excellent Test, in which, that the old juggling Principles of the Covenant might not be renewed, wherein they still swore to serve the King in their own Way, the Parliament did positively ordain, that this Oath should be taken in the plain genuine Meaning of the Words, without any Evasion whatsoever. Notwithstanding whereof the Earl of Argyle, by this Paper, does invent a new Way, whereby no Man is at all bound to it. For how can any Person be bound, if every Man will only obey it as far as he can, and as far as he conceives it consistent with the Protestant Religion, and with it self, and reserve to himself, notwithstanding thereof, to make any Alteration that he thinks consistent with his Loyalty ? And therefore his Majesty's Advocate desires to know, to what the Earl of Argyle, or any Man else, can be bound by this Test ? what the Magistrate can expect, or what Way he can punish his Perjury ? for if he be bound no further than he himself can obey, or so far as this Oath is consistent with the Protestant Religion, or it self, quomodo constat, to whom or what is he bound ? and who can determine that ? or against what Alteration is the Government secured, since he is Judge of his own Alteration ? so that that Oath which was to be taken without any Evasion, is evaded in every single Word or Letter, and the Government as unsecure, as before the Act was made, because the Taker is no further bound than he pleases. From which it cannot be denied, but his Interpretation destroys, not only this Act, but all Government, since it takes away the Security of all Government, and makes every Man's Conscience, under which Name there goes ordinarily, in this Age, Humour and Interest, to be the Rule of the Taker's Obedience. Nor can it be conceived to what Purpose Laws, but especially Oaths, needed to be made, if this were allowed ; or how this cannot fall under the 197 Act, Par. 7. Jam. VI. whereby it is statuted, That no Man interpret the Statutes otherwise than the Maker understood. For what can be more contrary to the taking of them in the Maker's Sense, than that every Man should obey as far as they can, and be allowed to take them in a general Sense, so far as they are consistent with themselves and the Protestant Religion, without condescending wherein they do not agree with the Protestant Religion ? and that they are not bound not to make any Alteration, which they think good for the States ; for all these make the Rule of Obedience in the Taker, whereas the positive Law makes it to be in the Maker. Or how could they be punished with Perjury after this Oath ? for when he were quarrelled for making Alterations against this Oath, and so to be perjured, he might easily answer, that he took this Oath only in so far as it was consistent with the Protestant Religion, and with a salvo, that he might make any Alteration that he thought consistent with his Loyalty. And as to these Points upon which he were to be quarrelled, he might say, he did not think them to be inconsistent with his Loyalty, think we what we pleased, and so needed not be perjured, except he pleased to decide against himself ; for in these Generals he reserves to himself to be still Judge ; and this were indeed a fine Security for any Government. And by the same Rule, that it looses this Oath, it shews a Way of loosing all Oaths and Obedience, and consequently strikes at the Root of all Laws as well as this : Whereas, to shun all this, not only this excellent Statute 107. has secured all the rest, but this is common Reason ; and in the Opinion of all Divines, as well as Lawiers in all Nations, verba juramenti intelliguntur secundum mentem & intentionem ejus cui fit juramentum, which is set down as the grand Position by Sanderfon ( whom they cite ) p. 137. and is founded upon that Mother Law, L. 10. cui interrogatus, ff. de interrogationibus in jure faciendis, and without which no Man can have Sense of Government in his Head, or practise it in any Nation. Whereas, on the other Hand, there is no Danger to any tender Conscience, since there was no Force upon the Earl to take the Oath, but he took it for his own Advantage, and might have abstained.

2<sup>do</sup>. It is inferred from the abovementioned Matter of Fact, that the Earl is clearly guilty of Contravention of the 10 Act, Par. 10. Jam. VI. whereby the Lieges are commanded not to write any Purpose of Reproach of his Majesty's Government, or misconstrue his Proceedings, whereby any Misliking may be raised betwixt his Highness, his Nobility, or his People. And who can read this Paper without seeing the King and Parliament reproached openly in it ? For who can hear, that the Oath is only taken as far as it is consistent with it self and the Protestant Religion, but must necessarily conclude, that in several Things it is inconsistent with it self and the Protestant Religion ? For if it were not inconsistent with it self and the Protestant Religion, why this Clause at all, but it might have been simply taken ? For the only Reason of hindring it to be taken simply, was because of the Inconsistency, ergo, there behoved necessarily to be an Inconsistency. And if there be any Inconsistency with the Protestant Religion, or any Contradiction in the Oath it self, can there be any Thing a greater Reproach on the Parliament, or a greater Ground of Mislike to the People ? And whereas it is pretended, that all Laws and Subsumptions should be clear, and these are only Inferences ; it is answered, that there are some Things which the Law can only forbid in general ; and and there are many Inferences which are as strong and natural, and reproach as soon, or sooner than the plainest Defamations in the World do; for what is openly said of Reproach to the King, does not wound him so much as many seditious Insinuations have done, in this Age and the last: So that whatever was the Earl's Design (albeit it is always conceived to be unkind to the Act against which himself debated in Parliament) yet certainly the Law, in such Cases, is only to consider what Effect this may have amongst the People, and therefore the Acts of Parliament, that were to guard against the misconstruing of his Majesty's Government, do not only speak of what was designed, but where a Disliking may be caused, and so judgeth ab effectu: And consequentially to the same emergent Reason, it makes all Things tending to the raising of Dithke, to be punishable, by the Act 60. Par. 6. Q. Mary, and the 9. Act. Par. 20. James VI. so that the Law designed to deter all Men, by these indefinite and comprehensive Expressions; and both in this and all the Laws of Leasing-making, the Judges are to consider what falls under these general and comprehensive Words: Nor could the Law be more special here, since the Makers of Reproach and Slander are so various, that they could not be bound up, or express in any Law. But as it evidently appears, that no Man can hear the Words express, if he believe this Paper, but he must think the Parliament has made a very ridiculous Oath, inconsistent with it self and the Protestant Religion, the Words allowing no other Sense, and having that natural Tendency; ven as a Man would say, I love such a Man only in so far as he is an honest Man, he behoved certainly to conclude, that the Man was not every way honest: So if your Lordships will take Measures by other Parliaments, or your Predecessors, you will clearly see, that they thought less than this a defaming of the Government, and misconstruing his Majesty's Proceedings. For in Balmerino's Case, the Justices find an humble Supplication made to the King himself, to fall under these Acts now cited; albeit, as that was a Supplication, so it contained the greatest Expressions of Loyalty, and Offers of Life and Fortune, that could be express; yet because it insinuates darkly, That the King, in the preceding Parliament, had not favoured the Protestant Religion, and they were sorry he should have taken Notes with his own Hands of what they said, which seems to be most innocent, yet he was found guilty upon those same very Acts, and the Parliament 1661. found his Lordship himself guilty of Leasing-making, tho' he had only written a Letter to a private Friend, which requires no great Care nor Observation; (but this Paper, which was to be a Part of his own Oath, does) because, after he had spoken of the Parliament in the first Part of his Letter, he thereafter added, That the King would know their Tricks; which Words might be much more applicable to the private Persons therein designed, than that the Words now insisted on can be capable of any such Interpretation: And if either Interpretations, upon pretext of exonerating of Conscience, or otherwise, be allowed, a Man may easily defame as much as he pleases. And have we not seen the King most defamed by Covenants entred into, upon pretence to make him great and glorious, by Remonstrances made to take away his Brother and best Friend, upon pretence of preserving the Protestant Religion, and his sacred Person? And did not all who rebelled against him in the last Age, declare, That they thought themselves bound in Duty to obey him, but still as far as that could consist with their Respect to the Protestant Religion, and the Laws and Liberties, which made all the rest ineffectual? And whereas it is pretended, That by these Words, I take the same in as far as it is consistent with itself, and the Protestant Religion, nothing more is meant, but that he takes it as a true Protestant. His Majesty's Advocate appeals to your Lordships, and all the Hearers, if, upon hearing this Expression, they should take it in this Sense, and not rather think that there is an Inconsistency; for if that were possible to be the Sense, what need he say at all, as far as it is consistent with itself? Nor had the other Part, as far as it is consistent with the Protestant Religion, been necessary; for it is either consistent with the Protestant Religion, or otherwise they were Enemies to the Protestant Religion that made it; nor are any Lawiers or others in Danger, by pleading or writing, for these are very different from, and may be very easily pleaded, without defaming a Law and an Oath, when they go to take it: But if any Lawier should say in pleading or writing, That the Test was inconsistent, or, which is all one, that it were not to be taken by any Man, but so far as it was consistent with it self and the Protestant Religion, no doubt this would be a Crime even in Pleading, tho' Pleading has a greater Allowance than deliberate Swearing has; and as there is nothing wherein there is not some Inconveniency, so the Inconveniency of defaming the Government, is much greater than that of any private Man's Hazard, who needs not err except he please.

Whereas it is pretended, That before the Earl gave in his Explication, there were other Explications spread abroad, and Answers read to them in Council, and that the Council it self gave an Explication. It is answered, That if this Paper be Leasing-making, or misconstruing his Majesty's Proceedings, and treasonable, as is contended, then a Thousand of the like Offences cannot excuse it; and when the King accused Noblemen, Ministers and others, in the Year 1661. for going on in the Rebellions of that Age, first with the Covenanters, and then with the Usurpers, it was found no Defence, That the Nation was overgrown with those Crimes, and that they were thought to be Duties in those Days; yea, this were to invite Men to offend in Multitudes: And albeit, sometimes, these who follow the Example of Multitudes, may thereby pretend this as an Excuse to many, yet this was never a formal Defence against Guilt, nor was ever the Chief of the Offenders favoured on that Head. And it is to be presumed, That the Earl of Argyle would rather be followed by others, than that he would follow any Example. But his Majesty's Advocate does absolutely decline to debate a Point that may defame a constant and standing Act of Parliament, by leaving upon Record a Memory of its being opposed; nor were this relevant, except it could be said, the Council had allowed such Explications which reflected upon the King and the Government: For the writing an Answer is no Allowance but a condemning; nor can the Council allow any more than they can remit. And though it may justly be denied, that the Council heard even the Earl's own Explanation, yet the hearing or allowing him to sit, is no relevant Plea, because they very justly might have taken a Time to consider how far it was fit to accuse upon that Head; and it is both just and fit for the Council to take Time, and, by express Act of Parliament, the Negligence of the King's Officers does not bind them: For if this were allowed, leading Men in the Council might commit what Crimes they pleased in the Council, which certainly the King may quarrel many Years after; and tho' all the Council had allowed him that Day, any Officer of State might have quarrelled it the next Day. As to the Opinion of Bellarmino, Sanderson, and others, it is ever contended, that the Principles of the Covenant agree very well with these of the Jesuits, and both do still allow Equivocations and Evasions; but no solid orthodox Divine ever allowed, that a Man who was to swear without any Evasion, should swear so as he is bound to nothing, as it is contended the Earl is not, for the Reasons represented. And as they still recommend, that when Men are not clear they might abstain, as the Earl might have done in this Case, so they still conclude, that Men should tell in clear Terms, what the Sense is by which they are to be bound to the State: Whereas the Earl here tells only in general, and in most ambiguous Terms, That he takes it as far as he can obey, and as far as it is consistent with the Protestant Religion, and that he takes it in his own Sense, and that he is not bound by it from making Alterations, but as far as he thinks it for the Advantage of Church or State; which Sense is a Thousand times more doubtful than the Test, and is, in effect, nothing but what the Taker pleases himself.

As to the Treason founded on, his Majesty's Advocate founds it first upon the fundamental and common Laws of this and all Nations, whereby it is Treason for any Man, to make any Alteration he shall think for the Advantage of Church or State, which he hopes is a Principle cannot be denied in the general. And whereas it is pretended, That this cannot be understood of mean Alterations, and of Alterations to be made in a lawful Way; it is answered, That as the Thing it self is Treason, so this Treason is not taken off by any of those Qualifications, because he declares, he will wish and endeavour any Alteration he thinks fit; and any Alteration comprehends all Alterations he thinks fit: Nam propositio indefinita aequipollet universali. And the Word any is general in its own Nature, and is in plain Terms, a reserving to himself to make Alterations both great and small; and the Restriction is not, all Alterations the King shall think fit, or are consistent with the Laws and Acts of Parliament, but he is still to be Judge of this, and his Loyalty is to be the Standard: Nor did the Covenanters in the last Age, nor do these who are daily executed, decline that they are bound to obey the King simply, but only that they are bound to obey him no otherwise, than as far as his Commands are consistent with the Law of God, of Nature, and of this Kingdom, and with the Covenant; and their Treason lies in this: And when it is asked them, who shall be Judge in this, they still make themselves Judges; and the Reason of all Treason being, that the Government is not secure, it is desired to be known, what way the Government can be secured after this Paper, since the Earl is still Judge how far he is obliged, and what is his Loyalty; and if this had been sufficient, the Covenant had been a very excellent Paper, for they are there bound to endeavour, in their several Stations, to defend the King's Person; but when the King challenged them, how they came to make War against him, their great Refuge was, That they were themselves still Judges as to that: And for illustrating this Power, the Lords of Justiciary are desired to consider, quid juris, if the Earl or any Man else should have reserved to himself in this Oath, a Liberty to rise in Arms, or to oppose the lineal Succession, tho' he had added, in a lawful Manner, for the Thing being in itself unlawful, this is but sham, and protestatio contraria facto: And if these be unlawful, notwithstanding of such Additions, so much more must this general Reservation, of making any Alterations, likewise be unlawful, notwithstanding of these Additions: For he that reserves the general Power of making any Alteration, does a fortiori reserve Power to make any Alteration, tho' never so fundamental; for all Particulars are included in the General, and whatever may be said against the Particulars, may much more strongly be said against the General.

2. The 130 Act, Par. 8. Jam. VI. is expressly founded on, because nothing can be a greater Diminution of the Power of the Parliament, than to introduce a Way or Means, whereby all their Acts and Oaths shall be made insignificant and ineffectual, as this Paper does make them, for the Reasons represented: Nor are any of the Estates of Parliament secure at this rate, but that they who reserved a general Power to make all Alterations, may, under that General, come to alter any of them.

3. What can be a greater Impugning of the Dignity and Authority of Parliaments, than to say, That the Parliament has made Acts for the Security of the Kingdom, which are in themselves ridiculous, inconsistent with themselves and the Protestant Religion?

And as to what is answered against invading the King's Prerogative, and the legislative Power in Parliaments, in adding a Part to an Oath or Act, is not relevantly inferred, since the Sense of these Words, and this I understand as a Part of my Oath, is not to be understood, as if any thing were to be added to the Law, but only to the Oath, and to be an Interpretation to the Oath. It is replied, That after this no Man needs to add a Caution to the Oath in Parliament; but when he comes to take the Oath, do the Parliament what they please, he will add his own Part: Nor can this Part be looked upon as a Sense; for if this were the Sense before this Paper, he needed not understand it as a Part of it, for it wanted not that Part; and in general, as every Man may add his own Part, so the King can be secure of no Part. But your Lordships of Justiciary are desired to consider, how dangerous it would be in this Kingdom, and how ill it would sound in any other Kingdom, that Men should be allowed to reserve to themselves Liberty to make any Alteration they thought fit, in Church or State, as to the Legality of which they were themselves to be Judges; and how far, from Degree to Degree, this at last may come to absolute Anarchy, and how scandalous a Thing, as well as unsecure, this new Way may look, in an Age wherein we are too much tracing the Steps of our rebellious Progenitors in the last, whose great Defection and Error was, that they thought themselves and not the King, the Authors of Reformation in Church and State: And no Man ever was barred by that, that the Way he was upon was not a lawful Way; for if it be allowed to every Man to take his own Way, every Man will think his own Way to be the lawful Way.

As to the Perjury, it is founded on this, First. That Perjury may be committed not only by breaking an Oath, but even in the swearing of it, viz. to swear it with such Evasions as make the Oath ineffectual; for which Sanderfon is cited, Page 138. Alterum perjuria genus est, novo aliquo excogitato commento, juramenti vim declinare, aut eludere, & jurans tenetur sub pœna perjuria, implere secundum intentionem deferentis; both which are here: For the Earl being bound by the very Oath, to swear in the genuin Meaning, without any Evasion, he has sworn so as he has evaded every Word, there being not one Word to which it can be said particularly he is bound, as is said. And it is undeniable, that he has not sworn in the Sense of the Makers of the Law, but in his own Sense, which is Perjury, as is said: And consequentially, whatever Sense may be allowed in ambiguous Cases, yet there can be none where the Paper clearly bears Generals; and where he declares, that he takes it in his own Sense, his Majesty's Advocate declares, he will not burden himself, that Copies were dispersed, tho' it is certain, since the very Paper it self, by the giving in, is chargeable with all that is above charged upon it.

Sir John Dalrymple replies for the Pannel, That since the solid Grounds of Law, adduced in the Defences, have received no particular Answers, in relation to the common Consent of all Casuists, viz. That a Party who takes an Oath, is bound in Conscience to clear and propose the Terms and Sense in which he does understand the Oath, nor in relation to the several Grounds adduced, concerning the legal and rational Interpretation of dubious Clauses; and since these have received no Answers, the Grounds are not to be repeated: But the Procurators for the Pannel do further insist on these Defences.

1. It is not alledged, That any Explanation was given in by the Pannel to any Person, or any Copy spread before the Pannel did take the Test in Council; so that it cannot be pretended, that the many Scruples that have been moved concerning the Test, did arise from the Pannel's Explication; but on the contrary, all the Objections that are answered and obviated in the Pannel's Explication, were not only privately muttered, or were the Thoughts of single or illiterate Persons, but they were the Difficulties proposed by Synods and Presbyteries, long before the Pannel came from home, or was required to take the Test: So that the general Terms of the Acts of Parliament, founded upon in the Libel, are not applicable in this Case; for as these Laws in relation to Leasing-makers, are only relative to atrocious wilful Insinuations, or Misconstructions of his Majesty's Person or Government, or the open depraving of his Laws, so the restrictive Clause, whereby Seditious or Misconstructions may be moved, raised, or engendred, betwixt his Majesty and his Lieges, cannot be applied to this Case, where all these Apprehensions and Scruples were on foot, and agitated long before the Pannel's Explanation.

As it cannot be pretended, That any new Dust was raised by the Pannel's Explanation, so it is positively offered to be proved, that there is not one Word contained in this Explanation, but that either these individual Words, or much worse, had been publicly proposed, and verbatim read in Council, without the least Discouragement, or the least Objection made by any Member of the Council; and where a Writing, ex proposito, read in so high a Court, was universally agreed upon, without the Alteration of a Syllable, how can it be pretended, that any Person thereafter using the said individual Terms in any Explanation, and far easier Terms, that they shall incur the high and infamous Crimes libelled? And the Question is not here, whether the Council was a proper Judicature to have proposed or imposed a Sense, or allowed any Explanation of the Test to be published; but that it is impossible that a Sense they allowed, or being publicly read before them, and which the King's Advocate did not controul, that this should import Treason or any Crime: And tho' the Pannel's Advocate will not pursue or follow the Reply that has been made to this Point, yet certainly no Man of sober Sense will think, that it is fit to insinuate, that so high a Judicature might have authorized or acquiesced in such Explanations, as the Lieges thereafter should be intrapped to have used.

If the Pannel had officiously or ultroneously offered a Sense or Explanation of his Majesty's Laws, which the Laws themselves could not have born, it might justly have been alledged, that he was extra ordinem, and meddling in a Matter he was not concerned in; but where the Act of Council did enjoin, and he was required and cited to that effect, it could neither be constructed as Ostentation, or to move or encourage Scruples or Resistance, but it was absolutely necessary either for to have refused the Test, or else to have declared what he thought to be the true and genuin Meaning of it; and there being so many Objections publicly moved and known, his Explanation was nothing else but to clear, that he did not look upon those Scruples and Objections moved by others, as well founded and rational in themselves, and therefore he was able to take the Test in that Sense the Council had heard or allowed; and it is not controverted, that the Sense of the Legislator is the genuin Sense both of Laws and Oaths: And if a Person were only interpreting the Meaning of either Law or an Oath imposed, he should deprave and misconstrue the Law and Oath, if he rendered it wittingly and willingly in Terms inconsistent with the Meaning of the Imposer: But there is a great Difference betwixt taking of Oaths, and interpreting Oaths; for when a Man comes to take an Oath, except his particular Sense did agree with the genuin Meaning of the Imposer, he cannot take that Oath, tho' he may very well interpret and declare what is the Sense of the Legislator, which he may know, and yet perhaps not be able to take the Oath.

And therefore, when there is any Doubtfulness in an Oath, and a Party is bound to take it, if then he gives in an Explication of the Sense, which he, in his private Judgment, doth apprehend to be the genuin Meaning, if that private Sense be disconform to the Legislator's Sense in the Oath, then the Imposer of the Oath, or he that has Power to offer it to the Party, if he consider the Party's Sense disconform, he ought to reject the Oath, as not fulfilling the Intent of the Law imposing it.

But it is impossible to state that as a Crime, that a Party should neither believe what is proposed in the Oath, nor be able to take it; and he can run no farther Hazard, but the Penalty imposed upon the Refuser; and therefore, in all Oaths, there must be a Concourse both of the Sense imposed by Authority, and of the private Sense, Judgment, or Conscience of the Party. And therefore, if a Party should take an Oath in the Sense proposed by Authority, contrary to his own Sense, he were perjured: Whereby it is evident, that the Sense of Authority is not sufficient, without the Acquiescence and Consent of the private Person; and therefore it is very strange, why that Part of the Pannel's Explanation should be challenged, that he takes it in his own Sense, the posterior Words making it as plain as the Light, that that Sense of his own is not what he pleases to make of the Oath, for it bears expressly, that no Body can explain it but for himself, and reconcile it as it is genuin, and agrees in its own Sense; so that there must be a Reconciliation betwixt his own Sense and the genuin Sense, which upon all Hands is acknowledged to be the Sense of Authority: And if the Pannel had been of these lax and debauch'd Principles, that he might have evaded the Meaning and Energy of the Oath, by imposing upon it what Sense he pleased, certainly he would have contented himself in the general Refuge of Equivocation, or Mental Reservation; and he would never have exposed his Sense to the World, in which he took this Oath, whereby he became absolutely fixed and determined to the Oath, in that particular Sense, and so had no Latitude of shuffling off the Energy or Obligation of the Oath. And it is likewise acknowledged, That the Cases alledged in the Reply are true, viz. That the Person is guilty of Perjury, si aliquo novo commento he would elude his Oath, or who doth not fulfil the Oath in the Sense of the Imposer; but that does not concern this Case: For in the foresaid Citation, a Person after he has taken an Oath, finding out some new Conceit to elude it, he is perjured: But in this Case, the Pannel did, at and before his taking the Test, declare the Terms in which he understood it; so that this was not novo aliquo commento to elude it. And the other Case, where a Party takes it in the Sense of Authority, but has some Subterfuge, or concealed Explanation, it is acknowledged to be Perjury; but in this Case, there was no concealed Explanation, but it was publicly exprest, and an Explanation given, which the Pannel designed and understood as the Meaning of Authority, and had Ground to believe he was not mistaken, since, upon that Explanation, he was received and allowed to sit and vote in Council.

And as to that Part of the Reply that explains the Treason, there can be no Treason in the Pannel's Case, because the exprest A& of Parliament founded upon, doth relate only to the Constitution of the Parliament; and I am sure, his Majesty's Advocate cannot subsume in these Terms: And therefore, in the Reply, he recurs to the general Grounds of the Law, That the usurping of his Majesty's Authority, in making a Part of the Law, and to make Alterations in general, without the King, are high and treasonable Words or Designs, and such as the Party pleases, and such Designs as have been practised in the late Times; and that even the Adjection of fair and safe Words, as in the Covenant, does not secure from treasonable Designs; and that it was so found in Balmerino's Case, tho' it bear a fair Narrative of an humble Supplication.

It is replied, That the Usurpation of making of Laws is undoubtedly treasonable; but no such Thing can be pretended or subsumed in this Case: For albeit the Pannel declares his Explanation to be a Part of his Oath, yet he never meant to impose it as even a Part of the Law, or that his Explanation should be a Thing distinct, or a separate Part of his Oath; for this Explanation being but exegetick of the several Parts of the Oath, it is no distinct Thing from the Oath, but declared to be a Part of the Oath, de natura rei. And it was never pretended, That he that alledged any thing to be de natura rei, did say that that was distinct and separate, which were a Contradiction; and therefore the Argument is retorted. The Pannel having declared this Explanation was de natura rei, implied in the Oath, he necessarily made this Explanation no Addition or Extension of the Oath; so that for all this Explanation, the Oath is neither broader nor longer than it was.

And as to these Words, I do not mean to bind up my self in my Station, and in a lawful Way, to wish and endeavour any Alteration I think to the Advantage of Church or State, not repugnant to the Protestant Religion, and my Loyalty. It is a strange Thing how this Clause can be drawn in question, as treasonable, when it may, with better Reason, be alledged, that there is not a good Subject but is bound to say it. And albeit the Words, to endeavour in my Station, be Words contained in the Covenant, yet that is no Reason, why Two Words in the Covenant, may not be made Use of in another very good and loyal Sense: And there is no Man that shall have the Honour either to be entrusted by his Majesty in his Council, or any other Judicature, or to be a Member of Parliament, but he is bound by his Loyalty to say the same Thing; and there was never a Clause more cautiously exprest, for the Words run, to endeavour any Alteration I shall think to the Advantage of Church and State. And though that was sufficient, yet the Clause is so cautiously conceived, that it contains another Restriction, not repugnant to Religion and his Loyalty. So that except it could be alledged, that a Man, by lawful Means, to the Advantage of Church and State, consistent with his Religion and Loyalty, could make treasonable Alterations and Invasions on the Government and Monarchy, which are the highest Contradictions imaginable, there can be nothing against the Pannel. And albeit the Clause, any Alterations, might, without the Restrictions and Qualifications foresaid, be generally extended, yet the preceeding Words of lawful Way, and the rational Interpretation of the Emission of Words, especially before a solemn Judicatory, leaves no other Place or Shadow to doubt, that these Alterations were no fundamental or treasonable Alterations, but such as the Frailty of human Affairs and Constitutions, and Vicissitude of Things and Circumstances, do constantly require, in the most exact Constitutions under Heaven. And the Clause does not so much as import, that there is a present Necessity of Alteration, but it was a necessary and rational Prospect, that albeit at present, all Things under Heaven had been done to secure the Religion and Government, yet there might occur Cases that might require new Helps, Alterations, and Remedies. And it is not pretended in this Case for the Pannel, that he desires to alleviate or take off Words truly treasonable, or having an ill Design, by the mixing of fair and safe, dutiful and submissive Expressions, which indeed are Protestations contraria facto: For there is nothing in his Explanation, that either in his Design, or in the Words themselves, being rationally and naturally interpreted, can infer the Crimes libelled, or any of them; and the Pannel's known Principles and known Practices, do not only clear that Loyalty that he has profest before the Lords of Justiciary, and instructed by unquestionable Documents, but they put him far from the Suspicion of these damnable Principles related in the Reply, of which the whole Tract of his Life hath been an entire Evidence of his Abhorrency and Detestation. And in the last Place, it is thought strange, why that should be represented as an Affront or Disgrace to the Government, that the Parliament imposed a Test, which the Pannel is not able to take simply: And it is not pretended, that he hath defamed, written, or spoken against the Test it self, or for the Inconveniency of it, but only that he hath not been able to see the good Ground upon which it may be simply taken; and this were to condemn him for Want of Sight or Sense, when the Law hath punished no Man for not taking the Test, but only turned him out of the Government. And it is as strange an Inference, that because the Pannel declares, he believes the Parliament meant no Contradiction, and would take the Test, in as far as it is consistent, that therefore he said, the Parliament imposed Contradictions; which is so far from a rational Induction, that the Contradiction of these Subsumptions, in all Congruity of Language and Sense, is necessarily true; and therefore the last Part of that Clause, in so far as it is consistent, is a Consequence inferred upon the former, viz. I believe the Parliament designed to impose no Contradictions, ergo I take the Test as consistent, and in so far as it must be consistent, if the Parliament did not impose Contradictions, as certainly they have not; and to convince the World, that in this Sense this Explanation is receiveable, it was proposed in Council, and allowed; and therefore, without the highest Reflection, it cannot now be quarrelled.

Sir George Lockhart's Reply to the King's Advocate. N<sup>o</sup>. LXX. 6.

Sir George Lockhart duplies, that the Defender repeats and oppones his former Defences, which are noway solid nor satisfied by the Reply made by his Majesty's Advocate. And altho' it be easy for the King's Advocate, consistent with the Pannel's Designs, nor with his Words and Expressions, yet there cannot be a more dangerous Foundation laid, for the Security and Interest of the Government, and the Security and Protection of the Subjects, than that Crimes should be inferred but from clear, evident and exprefs Laws, and plain palpable Contravention of these Laws, it being both against the Laws of God and Man, that a Man should be made an Offender for a Word, and especially for Expressions, which, according to Sense and Reason, and considering the Time and Place where they were spoken by the Pannel, viz. as a Member of his Majesty's Privy Council, and in Presence of his Royal Highness and the Members of Council, and when required to take the Test, were safe and innocent: And it were against all Law and Reason to suppose, that the Pannel either did, or designed to do any Thing which may, or did import the Crimes libelled against him. And whereas it is pretended, that the Oath required and imposed by Act of Parliament was for the Security of the Government; and that the Pannel, by his Explanation, does evade the Oath, by taking it only so far as it is consistent with the Protestant Religion, and his own Loyalty, whereof he was Judge. It is answered; that the Pretence is most unwarrantable, and the Security of his Majesty's Government is not at all endangered, (as God forbid it should) tho' the Pannel and a Thousand more had simply refused the Test, or had taken it in a Sense which does not satisfy the Law, it being competent to publick Authority to consider, whether the Pannel's Oath, in the Terms of the Explication wherein he did take it, does satisfy the Act of Parliament or not; and if not, there can be no rational Consequence inferred thereupon, but that he is holden as a Refuser of the Oath, and liable to the Certification of the Act of Parliament, of not assuming and continuing in any publick Trust; and no more was intended or designed by the Act of Parliament it self, than strictly to make the Oath, in the true and genuin Sense and Meaning of the Parliament, an indispensable Qualification of Persons admitted to publick Trust; so that it is not at all material to dispute, whether the Pannel's Explication can be looked upon as a full Satisfaction of the Act, which, whether it should or not, it can import no Crime against him, it not being consistent with Sense and Reason, that a Person, who absolutely refuseth the Test, upon the Scrupulosity of his Conscience, albeit he be not capable of publick Trust, should be, notwithstanding, looked upon as guilty of no Crime: And yet another, who was willing to go to a greater Length, albeit he did demur and scruple as to the full Length, that he should be reputed Criminal, and guilty of a Crime.

2. The Pannel repeats, and conjoyns with this, the Grounds abovementioned, contained in his Defences, viz. That neither the Crimes libelled, nor any other Crime, were ever pretended or made Use of against any others, who did spread abroad Objections of an high Nature, which yet were so favourably looked upon, as to be construed only to proceed from Scrupulosity of Conscience; as also the Satisfaction endeavoured, is in such Terms, and by such Condescensions, as do take in, and justify the whole Terms of the Explication libelled.

It is of great Moment, and whereof the Lords of Justiciary are desired to take special Notice, both for clearing the absolute Innocence of the Pannel's Meaning and Intention, and to take off all possible Misconstruction, that can be wrested or detorted from the Tenor and Expressions of the libelled Explication; That the Pannel was put to, and required to take the Oath, before the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council did pass, or publish their Proclamation explaining the Oath, and declaring the genuin Sense and Meaning thereof, namely, that it did not ty to the whole Articles of the Confession of Faith, ratified by Act of Parliament, Jam. VI. and which, as to several Articles thereof, had occasioned the Scruples and Difficulties, and alledged Inconsistency and Contradiction betwixt the last Part of the Oath, and the said Confession, and betwixt some of these Articles and the Current of the Protestant Doctrine, received and contained in the Synagma of the Protestant Confessions. And therefore, if the Pannel, at that Time, did think fit, for the clearing and Exoneration of his own Conscience, to use the Expressions in the Explication libelled, and yet, with so much Duty and Confidence of the Parliament's Justice, as to their Meaning and Intention, That the Parliament never intended to impose contradictory Oaths, and that he did take it so far as it was consistent with it self, and the Protestant Religion, not knowing then whether the whole Confession was to be reputed a Part of the Oath, and doubting thereanent; and which the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, and his sacred Majesty, by his Approbation since, have thought a Difficulty of so great Moment, as it was fit to clear the same by a publick Proclamation: How now is it possible that any Judicatory under Heaven, which proceeds upon the solid Grounds of Law and Reason, and who (it cannot be doubted) will have a just Regard to the intrinsic Principles of Justice, and to all Mens Security, that they can now believe all or any of the Crimes libelled, should be in the least inferred from all, or any of the Expressions contained in the said Explication? but that, on the contrary, it was a warrantable Allowance, and Christian Practice, condemned by the Law and Custom of no Nation, that having Scruples in the Matter of an Oath, which should be taken in Truth, Judgment and Righteousness, and upon full Deliberation, and with a full Assurance and Sincerity of Mind, that he did plainly, openly and clearly declare the Sense in which he was willing to take it; and if Authority did allow it as the genuin Sense of the Oath, the Pannel to be holden as a Taker of the Oath: And if, upon further Consideration, Authority think not that, habetur pro recusante, and a Refuser of the Oath, but no ways to be looked upon as a Criminal, and guilty Person.

And the Pannel repeats, and conjoyns with this Point of the Reply, that Point in his Defence, whereby he positively offers to prove, 1<sup>mo</sup>. That his Explication, and the Sense wherein he took the Oath, was heard and publicly given and received in Council, and the Pannel thereafter allowed to take his Place, and sit and vote in that Sederunt.

2<sup>do</sup>. The Pannel also offers positively to prove, that the Tenor and Terms of his Sense and Explication, wherein he did take the Oath, is contained in that solid, learned and pious Vindication, written by the Bishop of Edinburgh, in answer to the Objections and alledged Inconsistencies and Contradictions in the Oath, and which Vindication was publickly read in Council, and so far approved, that it was allowed to be printed and published, and was accordingly dispersed and spread abroad. And it is not of the least Import, that the Proclamation of the Lords of Privy Council, altho' it does oft allow the same to be taken by the Clergy, yet, at the same Time, they expressly declare the genuin Sense and Meaning of the Parliament, not to comprehend the whole Articles of the Confession, which was not cleared before the Pannel's taking his Oath.

And whereas it is pretended, that the Acts of Parliament, libelled upon, against Leasing-makers, Depravers of his Majesty's Laws, do obtain and take Place, wherever there are any Words or Expressions that have a Tendency, in themselves, or by a natural Consequence, and rational Inferences, to reflect upon the Government, or misconstrue his Majesty's Proceedings; and that the Explication libelled is such, and that it was found so in the Case of Balmerino, albeit it was drawn up by way of humble Petition and Address to his Majesty, and with great Protestations and Expressions of Loyalty. It is answered, the Acts of Parliament libelled upon are opposed, and the 43 Act, Par. 8. Jam. VI. and the other Acts making the depraving of his Majesty's Laws to be Crimes, do expressly require, that Speeches, so judged, be perverse and licentious Speeches, ex natura sua probrosa, and reproachful, and spoke animo defamandi, and which could not receive any other rational Construction, which cannot, in the least, be applied to, or subsumed upon the Words or Explication given in by the Pannel; and Law and Reason never infers or presumes a Crime, where the Thing is capable of a fair and rational Construction, and where it was done palam and publickly, and in presence of his Majesty's high Commissioner, and Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, whereof the Pannel had the Honour to be a Member. Persons committing and designing to commit Crimes, making use of Times and Places, and Companies of another Nature, on whom their Suggestions and Insinuations may prevail: But it is a Violence to the common Reason of Mankind, to pretend, that a Person of the Pannel's Quality, having the Honour to serve his Majesty in most eminent Capacities, and devoted to his Majesty's Interest and Service, beyond the strictest Ties of Duty and Allegiance, by the transcendent Favours he had received, that the Pannel, in those Circumstances, and in the Presence of his Royal Highness and Lords of Privy Council, should design to declaim, and de facto declaim against, and defame his Majesty's Government; to suppose this is absolutely contradictory to the common Principles and Practices of Law, and common Topicks of Reason.

And as to Balmerino's Case, it is answered, that the Lords of Justiciary are humbly desired to call for, and peruse the said Petition and Books of Adjournal, which was certainly a defamatory Libel of his Majesty's Father of blessed Memory, and of the States of Parliament, in the highest Degree, being expressly, that there was nothing designed but an Innovation of the Protestant Religion, and the Subversion and Overturning the Liberties and Privileges of the Parliament, and the Constitutions of the Articles, and other Things of that Kind, which made certainly, of it self, a most villainous and execrable Libel, containing the highest Crimes of Treason and Perduellion, and was not capable of any good Sense or Interpretation, but was absolutely pernicious and destructive; so that it is in vain to pretend, that the said Libel did contain Prefaces and Protestations of Loyalty, which no Law regards, even in simplici injuria & maledicto, tho' committed by a private Person, cum prafatione, salvo honore, or the like, and which were certainly ridiculous to sustain in a Libel concerning Crimes of Treason.

And whereas it is pretended, That tho' others were guilty of these Crimes, it does not excuse the Earl; that the Lords of Privy Council cannot remit Crimes, and the Negligence of the King's Officers cannot prejudice his Interest: It is answered, the Pannel is very confident, that neither the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, consisting of Persons of eminent Loyalty and Judgment, nor his Majesty's Officers were capable of any such Escape, as is pretended: And if the Tenor of the Pannel's Explication did, in the least, import the high and infamous Crimes libelled, as beyond all peradventure it does not, it were strange, how the same being contained in the aforesaid Vindication, and the whole Clauses thereof justified, that this should have been looked on as no Crime, and allowed to be published. And the Pannel neither does, nor needs to make further Use thereof, but to convince all disinterested Persons, that his Explication can import no Crime.

And whereas it is pretended, That the Crime of Treason is inferred from the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, and from that Clause of the Pannel's Explication, whereby he declares, he is not bound up by any Thing in this Oath not to endeavour any Alteration in a lawful Way; which being an indefinite Proposition, is equipollent to an universal, and is, upon the Matter, coincident with a Clause, which was rebellious in its Consequences, contained in the solemn League and Covenant. It is answered, that it is strange how such a plain and innocent Clause, whereby, beyond all question, he does express no more than was naturally imported in the Crime of Treason, which no Lawier ever allowed, except where it was founded upon express Law, and luc meridiana clarior: And indeed if such Stretches and Inferences can make Men guilty of Treason, no Man can be secure. And the Words in the Pannel's Declaration are plain and clear (yet non sunt cavilanda) and import no more, but that, in his Station, and in a lawful Way, and consistent with the Protestant Religion and his Loyalty, he might endeavour any Alteration to the Advantage of Church and State. And was there ever any loyal or rational Subject, that does, or can doubt, that this is the natural Import of the Oath? And indeed it were a strange Oath, if it were capable of another Sense, and being designed for the Security of the Government, should bind up Mens Hands to concur for its Advantage. And how was it possible, that the Pannel, or any other in the Capacity of a Privy Counsellor, or a Member of the Parliament, would have satisfied his Duty and Allegiance in other Terms? And whereas it is pretended, that there was the like Case in the pretended League and Covenant; it is answered, the Assertion is evidently a Mistake, and tho' it were, the Argument is altogether inconsequential: For that League and Covenant was treasonable in it self, as being a Combination entred into without his Majesty's Authority, and was treasonable in the Glosses that were put upon it, and was imposed by absolute Violence on the Subjects of this Kingdom. And how can the Pannel be in the least supposed to have had any Respect to the said League and Covenant, when he had so often taken the Declaration, disowning and renouncing it as an unlawful and sinful Oath, and and concurred in the many excellent Laws and Acts of Parliament, made by his Majesty, condemning the same as seditious and treasonable? And whereas it is pretended, that the Pannel is guilty of Perjury, having taken the Oath in another Sense than was consistent with the genuin Sense of the Parliament, and that, by the Authority cited, he doth commento eludere juramentum, which always ought to be taken in the Sense of him that imposeth the Oath; it is answered, the Pretence is most groundless, and Perjury never was, nor can be inferred, but by the Commission, or Omission of some thing directly contrary to the Oath. And altho' it is true, that where an Oath is taken, without any Declaration of the express Sense of the Persons who take it, it obliges sub pœna perjurii, in the Sense, not of the Taker, but of the Imposer of the Oath; because expressing no Sense, Law and Reason presumes there is a full Acquiescence in the Sense and Meaning of the Imposer of the Oath; and then, if an Oath be not so taken, he that takes it is guilty of Perjury: Yet there was never Lawier nor Divine, Popish or Protestant, but agree in this, that whatever be the Tenor of the Oath, if, before the taking thereof, the Party, in express Terms, does publicly and openly declare the Sense in which he takes it, it is impossible it can infer the Crime of Perjury against him in any other Sense, this not being commentum excogitatum, after the taking of the Oath: And if this were not so, how is it possible, in Sense and Reason, that ever any Explication or Sense could solve the Scruples of a Man's Conscience? for it might be always pretended, that, notwithstanding of the express Sense wherein he took it, he should be guilty of Perjury from another Sense: And that this is the irrefragable Opinion of all Divines of whatever Perswasion, is not only clear from the Authority abovementioned, even those who allow reserved Senses, but more especially by the universal Suffrage of all Protestant Divines, who, tho' they do abominate all Thoughts of Subterfuges, or Evasions after taking of the Oath, yet they do always allow and advise, for the Safety and Security of a doubting and scrupulous Conscience, that they should express and declare, before the taking of the Oath, the true Sense and Meaning wherein they have Freedom to take it, and for which Sanderfon, de juramento, is cited, Prælect. 6. Sect. 10. Page 75. where his Words are, Sane ut inter jurandum omnia recte fiant, expedit ut de verborum sensu, inter omnes partes quarum interest, liquido constet, quod veteribus dictum, liquido jurare. And an Oath being one of the highest Acts of Devotion, containing cultum patriæ, there is nothing more consonant to the Nature of all Oaths, and to that Candor, Ingenuity, and Christian Simplicity, which all Law and Religion requires in such Cases.

HIS Majesty's Advocate conceives he has nothing to answer as to Depraving, Leasing-making, and Misinterpreting, &c. save that this Oath was only designed to exclude Recusants; and consequently the Pannel may thereby be debarred from his Offices, but not made guilty of a Crime. To which he triplies, 1<sup>mo</sup>. If ever the Earl had simply refused, that had been true, but that did not at all excuse from defaming the Law, for a Defamer is not punished for refusing, but for defaming.

2<sup>do</sup>. If he had simply refused, the Government had been in no more Hazard: But if Men will both retain their Places, and yet take the same in such Words as secure not the Government, it were strange to think, that the Design of the Law, being to secure against Mens possessing who do not obey, that yet it should allow them Possession who do not obey. Nor is the Refuser here in a better Case than the Earl and others, who offered to obey, because it is the defaming the Law, as ridiculous and inconsistent with that Protestant Religion, and Leasing-making betwixt the King, and the Nobility, and the People, the misconstruing and misrepresenting, as hath been formerly urged, that puts the Earl in a worse Condition. And all these Arguments might be as well urged for any who had uncontrovertedly contravened these Acts, as for the Pannel.

Whereas it is pretended, that the King emitted a Proclamation to satisfy Dissenters: It is answered, that the Proclamation was designed for none who had been Members of Parliament, and so should have known the Sense; but it was designed for mere Ignorants, not for such as had defamed the Law, which is still here charged upon the Pannel.

As to the Article of Treason, it is conceived, that it is unanswerably founded on the common Law, discharging all Men to make Alteration of the Government; as to which there needs no express Statute, that being the very Essence of Government, and needing no Laws: Likeas it falls under all the Laws that discharge the assuming the royal or legislative Power; for to alter the Government is inseparably united to the Crown. Likeas the Subsumption is as clear, the express Words not bearing, that the Earl reserves to himself a Power to propose to his Majesty any Alterations, or to concur to serve his Majesty in making Alterations; but owning, in most general and arbitrary Terms, to wish and endeavour any Alteration he should think fit for the Advantage of Church or State, and not determining any Thing that could bind him otherwise, than according to his own Pleasure, for the Word (lawful) is still subjected to himself, and has subjoyned to it, as he should think fit, which governs the whole Proposition; and in that Sense, and as the Words are here set down, the greatest Rebel in Scotland will subscribe that Explanation, for there is no Man but would restrict himself to a lawful Obedience, provided he be Judge of the Lawfulness. And seeing all Oaths, proposed for the Security of Government, require a certain Dependence upon the Legislator, and not upon the Taker, it is impossible that that End could be attained by any Qualification, how special soever, which is made to depend absolutely upon the Taker, and not upon the Legislator. And we have often seen how little Security there is in these specious Words, the very Covenant it self having not only the Words above repeated, but attesting all the World to be Witnesses to their Loyalty and Sincerity. And as to the former Instances, viz. rising in Arms, or opposing the lawful Successor, there is no Covenanter in Scotland but will say, he will do neither, but in a lawful Way and in his Station, and in a Way consistent with his Loyalty, for a Man were mad to say otherwise: But yet, when they come to explain this, they will only do it as they think fit, and will be Judges themselves, and then will tell us, that defensive Arms are lawful, and that no Popish Successor should succeed, nor no Successor unless he subscribe the Covenant. And whereas it is pretended, that no Clause in the Test does exclude a Man from making Alterations: It is answered, that the Alterations which the Test allows are none at all, but in Subordination to Authority. And as to the Two Points abovementioned, it excludes all Alterations as to these Points. And as to the making fundamental Alterations, this Reservation allows to make any Alteration, and consequently fundamental Alterations. To preclude which Libertinism, this excellent Law was invented.

Whereas it is pretended, that the Pannel designs not to add any Thing as a Part of the Law, but as a Part of his Oath: It is duplied, since the Oath is a Part of the Law, whoever adds to the Oath adds to the Law.

Whereas it is pretended, that the Crime of Perjury cannot be inferred here, because all Divines allow, that the Taker of an Oath is still allowed to declare in what Sense he takes the Oath, and that this is clear from Sanderfon, Page 175. It is triplid, that there are Two dubious Senses. Lawiers and Divines allow, that the Taker should clear himself which of the Two he should take, which is very just, because, to which soever of the Two he determines himself, the Legislator, in that Case, is sure of him: But here it is not pretended, that there are Two Senses, nor does the Pannel declare in which of the Two he takes it, or in what clear Sense at all he takes it, which is indeed liquido jurare: But here the Pannel neither condescends what particular Clause of the Test is unclear; nor, after he has condescended upon the Articles, does he condescend upon the Sense, but in general mysterious Words where he can neither be followed or found out, he only takes it in so far as it is consistent with it self and the Protestant Religion, reserving the squaring all by his own Loyalty, as he did in the Beginning declare, that he took it in his own Sense, by which general Sense, neither is the Government secure of any Thing it does enjoyn, nor could he be punished if he transgressed. Nor can it be doubted but Perjury may be inferred by any equivocal or evading Sense, interjurandum, as well as by breaking an Oath afterwards, which is very clear from Sanderfon, Page 138. the Words whereof are, alterum perjurii genus est interjurandum, detorquere verba. And which is further clear by the 28 Page. but above all, from the Principles of Reason, and the Necessity of Commerce and Government: For if Men may adhibit such Glosses, even whilst they swear, as may make the Oath useles, what way will either Government or Commerce be maintained? And he deceives as much that deceives in swearing salvis verbis, as he who, after he has sworn, does break the Oath: Nay, and more too, because the breaking may come from Forgetfulness, or other Accidents; but the evading by general Clauses, which bind no Man, does, from the first Instance, originally make all Oaths useles and dangerous, and that this Interpretation elides the Oath absolutely, is very clear from what hath been formerly debated: For it may be argued, that the Earl broke the Oath in so far as, the first Day he swears the Oath, which bears to be without any Evasion (and must be so notwithstanding of whatever he could say) and the next Day he gives in this Evasion, which is a downright Violation of that Oath, and inconsistent with it; nor was this Oath forced, but voluntarily emitted to keep his own Places. And it was the greater Crime, that it was done in the Council, because that was to make it the more publick, and consequently the more to misrepresent the Government.

CHARLES, by the Grace of GOD, King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith: To Messengers at Arms, Our Sheriffs in that Part, conjunctly and severally, specially constitute, and to all and sundry Our good and loving Subjects, Greeting: Forasmuch as Archibald Earl of Argyle, being (for a treasonable Paper, wherein he had defamed Our Parliament and Laws) found guilty, by the Verdict of an unanimous Jury, of Leasing-making betwixt Us, Our Parliament, and People, of reproaching Our Laws, misrepresenting Our Government, and of the Crime of high Treason, in usurping Our Authority, he was notwithstanding kept at large, without any such Restraints as are usual to Persons so found guilty. And now he having, upon the Twentieth Day of December instant, escaped, adding the Breach of Prison to his other Crimes, and without waiting for that Clemency which he might have relied more upon, if he had not been conscious to himself of Guiltiness that required such an Escape, We having, by Our Royal Letter, ordained all Execution to be sifted, until We understood the Nature of his Crime; and Our Privy Council having, after the Verdict, interposed with Us, that notwithstanding he was found guilty, and that it was usual for completing the Process, that Sentence should be once pronounced, that yet We might, in Our Clemency, ordain Execution to be stopped, during Our royal Pleasure: Our Will is herefore, and We charge you straitly and command, that incontinent, these Our Letters seen, ye pass to the Market-crosses of Edinburgh, Stirling, Perth, Dumbarton, and other Places needful, and thereat, in Our Name and Authority, by open Proclamation, command and charge all Our Sheriffs, Stewarts, Magistrates of Our Burghs of Regality and Royalty, and all others in Jurisdiction, to pass, pursue, take, apprehend, imprison, and present to Justice, the Person of the said Archibald Earl of Argyle, wherever he can be found, within the Bounds of their Jurisdictions; and if he happen to flee out of one Jurisdiction into another, that they pursue him within the same: And We hereby require and command all Our good and loving Subjects, to concur with, aid, fortifie and assist Our said Magistrates, in the Prosecution of this Our Service. And if the said Earl of Argyle shall happen to flee to Strengths, or Houses for Refuge, that Our said Magistrates, and others assisting them, assiege and take the same in by Force of Arms: And if it shall happen, that the said Earl of Argyle, or any of his Complices, (resisting to be taken) be killed, mutilate, or slain by Our said Officers, or any assisting them, We declare they are hereby indemnified, and shall never be brought in question therefore, civilly nor criminally, in all Time coming. And further, that ye, in our Name and Authority foresaid, prohibit and discharge all Our Subjects of this Our Kingdom, to refer, supply, or intercommune mune with the said Earl, or his Accomplices, or to furnish him Meat, Drink, House, Harboury, or any other Thing necessary or comfortable to him, or to transport him to or from Ferries, under the Pain of Treason.

FOrasmuch as there being a Petition presented to his Majesty's Privy Council, by the Magistrates and Council of Edinburgh, and Principal, Masters, and Regents of the College thereof, desiring, that upon the Considerations therein contained, and upon the Obligements offered by them, they might be allowed to make open Classes, and receive the Scholars, notwithstanding of the late Act and Proclamation of Council: The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, upon Consideration of the foresaid Petition, and of a Report made by a Committee of their own Number, in the said Matter, do allow the Magistrates of Edinburgh, Principal, Masters, and Regents of the College thereof, to make open the said College, notwithstanding of the late Act and Proclamation; and do ordain the said Magistrates, before Re-entry of the Students, or any other Students to be entred for this Year, to take their Fathers, Tutor, or Friend, Cautioner for them, by Bond, for their orderly and peaceable Behaviour, in Time coming, and according to the Bond, and under the Penalties aftermentioned, viz. a Nobleman's Son, under the Penalty of Four thousand Merks, a Baron or chief Gentleman, Two thousand Merks, a Merchant or Burges's Son, One thousand Merks, the Son of a Tradesman, or Person of other inferior Quality, Five hundred Merks Scots Money; and that the said Magistrates be answerable for the Sufficiency of the Cautioner, and report an Account of their Diligence once every Month, until the ordinary Time of the Rising of the College. Follows the Tenor of the Bond abovementioned. I bind and oblige me, my Heirs and Successors, as Cautioner and Surety, acted in the Books of Privy Council, for Student in the College of Edinburgh, that the said shall, during the whole Time and Space that he shall remain a Student in the College of Edinburgh, and a Member of that Society, live orderly and peaceably, and that he shall not be accessory to the Breach of the publick Peace, neither by his Knowledge, causing, sending, hounding out, or Rathabitation; and that he shall engage himself in no unlawful Bonds or Combinations, or shall be accessory to any Tumults or unlawful Convocations, under the Penalty of in case of Failie: Consenting thir Presents be registrate in the Books of Privy Council, that Letters of Horning on Six Days, and others, may be direct hereupon, and constitutes my Procurators, &c. And further, the said Lords do ordain the Principal and Regents of the said College, before they receive any of the Students of the Three upper Classes, being the Semi, Batchelor, and Magistrand Classes, into their said respective Classes, to see them take the Oath of Allegiance, in Presence of the Bishop of Edinburgh, which is not to hinder the taking of the said Oath by such as shall receive Degrees. And the said Lords declare, that in case the Principal or Regents shall re-enter any of the said Students, or receive others, without giving in the Security, and taking the Oath of Allegiance, as aforesaid, then and in that Case, the Principal and Regents shall, ipso facto, be deprived of their said Offices and Function in the said College, and their Places ordained to be declared vacant, by the Magistrates of Edinburgh, Patrons of the College, and they allowed to appoint others to supply the same. And the said Lords do ordain, that before the said Students re-enter, or new Students be received in the said College, such Students first engage under their Hands, before the Bishop of Edinburgh, (when they take the Oath of Allegiance) that they shall keep the Church, and wait upon divine Worship, according to Law, which the said Principal and Regents are hereby ordered to see done, and not to receive into the said College, any such Students, entred or to be entred, without doing of the same, under the Certification aforesaid. And the said Lords do ordain and appoint, that at the Visitations of the other Universities of the Kingdom, the foresaid Rules for taking the Oath of Allegiance, and Engagements to keep the Church, be put in Execution in these respective Universities, and that the Principal, Masters, and Regents thereof, return to his Majesty's Privy Council, an Account of what Obedience has been given to their Act, enjoining the Students to take the Oath of Allegiance at their Laureation: And the said Lords do discharge any of the rest of the Universities, to receive any such Students as have left or shall leave the College of Edinburgh, upon the account of their Refusal of the Engagements abovementioned, as they will be answerable.

WE Undersubscribers, now Prisoners for the Truth in the Canongate Tolbooth Iron-house, though most vile, yet it pleased the Holy Ghost to work on our Spirits of a Time past, in clearing Causes of Wrath, and shewing us Duty from Day to Day, that now in some Time past we are, and have been called mad Men and Devils, and now there is none in the Kingdom, in Prison or out of Prison, that we can converse verse with as Christians: And Yesterday, being the 26 Day of the 5 Month, it seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us, to take out of our Bibles the Psalms in Metre, for several Causes mentioned afterwards; for the Book of the Revelation says, If any Man should add unto these Things, God shall add unto him the Plagues which are written in this Book; and we did burn them in our Prison-house, and sweep away the Ashes. Likewise, in the Holy Scriptures, we renounce Chapters and Verses, and Contents, because it is only done by human Wisdom, and the changing of the Books after the Holy Ghost had placed them. We being pressed to this Work by the Holy Ghost, do renounce the Impression and Translation of both the Old and New Testaments, and that for Additions put unto them by Men, and other Causes; as first, putting in horrid Blasphemy, making a Tyrant Patron of the Church, when the Scriptures hold of none but of God, and need no Patronage from any King, Prince, or Rulers, and the writing of that blasphemous, sacrilegious, (as some call it) the Exile dedicatory, filled with such Language as, Dread Sovereign, Highness, most high and mighty, most sacred Majesty; and likewise the horrid unparalleled Blasphemy, making a Triangle with these Hebrew Letters in it, thus, יהוה Jehovah, representing the Trinity; and likewise putting in horrid Pictures in several Places of the holy Scripture, and likewise drawing Scores betwixt the Books of the Bible, and other superfluous Traditions. Likewise, we renounce the Catechisms larger and shorter, and Confession of Faith, against which we have many Causes: One Cause is, in the 23 Chap. for the Scripture Proofs that they cite prove the contrary of that they write. We renounce the Acts of the General Assembly, and all the Covenants, and acknowledging of Sins, and Engagement to Duties, and that which they call Preaching-books, and all their Works, Way, Form, and Manner of Worship, Doctrine, Discipline, and Government, and the studying on their Books the Thing they call their Preaching; for, instead of going to God for his Mind to the People, they go to their Books, and so make their Books their God and their Leader, and so all following that way, go to Hell together: The Cause of this is, we find none of their Works but they are like themselves, carnal and corrupt, according to that Scripture, Hate the Garment spotted with the Flesh. We renounce the limiting of the Lord's Mind by Glasses, and their Ordination of Men only learned, and their saying, that Learning is the Essential of a Minister, without Grace. Likewise, we renounce their Manner of renewing Covenants, pressing Mens Consciences to take a Covenant, and by so doing, have filled the Kirk and State with Tyrants and incarnate Devils, as we find this Day: They knew the Men to have no Marks of Grace, but, on the other Hand, to be profane, as them they call King and Rulers, Captains and Commanders in State and Armies, and all Kirk-officers, whom we call Tyrants and Judases; for, by so doing, they have corrupted both Kirk and State; as this Day, Kirkmen and Statesmen, whom we call Judases and Tyrants, are studying, in opposition to Holiness and the Work of Reformation, who entered in by the same Covenants, are now pursuing our Lives for a Christian Walk. And likewise, we renounce the Covenant taken at Queensferry, commonly called Cargil's Covenant, and likewise Hamilton Declaration, yet, and Sanquhar Declaration, because they may and have owned these, and are owning these who are Enemies to Holiness, and were Enemies to us, and some of them said, we should suffer Kirk Censure, for giving over the old apostate Ministers to the Devil; and some of them counted us their Enemies for the Truth's sake, and sent us Word they would protest against us, and so we justify our Lord in breaking them at Ayr-moss; we justify the Lord likewise, in taking away that they call Field-preachings, or Mockings, because they were nothing but Rebellion against the high Lord, as we find now when our Lord is come to the Cross, there is neither Minister nor People to bide by him, of the many Thousands have flocked to the Thing they call Preachings or Mockings; and therefore now all are found void of saving Grace; and so we see that Word is accomplished, Narrow and strait is the Way that leadeth unto Life, and few there be that find it: And that other Word, Many shall strive and shall not be able. We finding all former Actions to be such as Devils have and can creep in at, (as Declarations and Covenants) and get the Name of Saints: Therefore, this Day, it seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us, to renounce and burn the former Covenants and Declarations, because they are not strait enough, according to Scripture, and all their Works suchlike; and therefore we will own none of their Works, till it please the Lord to give us teaching from himself. By this all may know and understand, we overturn, and formally burn all the former Works of the Clergy of Scotland, and throughout all the whole World, that are in opposition to Holiness. Dated the 6 Day of the Week, being the 27 of the Fifth Month, 1681. about Mid-day.

We renounce and decline all Authority throughout the World, and all that are in Authority, and all their Acts and Edicts, from the Tyrant Charles Stuart, to the lowest Tyrant, and burn them the same Day, being the sixth Day of the Week, the 27 Day of the fifth Month, 1681. at Canongate Tolbooth Iron-house.

We renounce the Names of Months, as January, February, March, April, May, June, July, August, September, October, November, December, Sunday, Munday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Martinmas, Holy-days, for there is none holy but the Sabbath Day, Lammas Day, Whitsunday, Candlemas, Beltan, Cross Stones and Images, Fairs named by Saints, and all the Remnants of Popery, Yule or Christmas, old Wives Fables and By-words, as Palm-sunday, Carlin-sunday, the 29 of May, being dedicate by this Generation to Profanity, Pasch-sunday, Hallow-even, Hogmynae Night, Valentine's Even, no marrying in the Month they call May, the innumerable Reliques of Popery, Atheism and Sorcery, and New-year's Day, and Hansel-munday, Dirgies and Lykewakes, Valentine's Fair, Chapels and Chaplains; likewise Sabbath Days Feakings, Blyth-meats, Banquetings, Revelling, Piping, Sportings, Dancings, Laughings, singing profane and lustful Songs and Ballads, Table Lawings, Monk Lands, Friar Lands, Black-friar Lands, Kirks and Kirk-yards, and Market-crosses, Font-stones, Images, Registers of Lands and Houses, Register Bonds, Discharges, and all their Law Works, Inhibitions, Hornings, Letters of Adjudications, Ships Passes, Profanity, and all unchaste Thoughts, Words and Actions, Formality and Indifferency, Story Books and Ballads, Romances and Pamphlets, Comedy-books, Cards and Dice, and all such like, we disown all of them, and burn them the sixth Day of the Week, being the 27 Day of the fifth Month, 1681. at the Canongate Tolbooth Iron-house.

We renounce all the Customs and Fashions of this Generation, their Way and Custom of eating and drinking, sleeping and wearing, and all our own former Ways, as well religious as moral, in so far as they have been squared and casten in this Generation's Mould, and all our iniquous Courses, Lightness and Unconcernedness with the Glory of God, the only End wherefore we were sent into the World, the seventh Day of the Week, being the 27 of the fifth Month.

We renounce all that are now in Prison-houses or Correction-houses, Men and Women; for none of them are with us in this Work: And when we sent them a Copy of this Our Renunciation, they called us Devils. The Copy of this we burnt, instead of the Books and Works of this apostate Generation, and buried the Ashes in our and covered it with Dust.

Notwithstanding of our burning Covenants and Declarations, and renouncing of them and their Works, be it known to all, that we do neither vindicate the cursed Murderers, of their Bloodshed on Fields, and Scaffolds, and Seas, and other horrid Cruelties, such as Torturings, Imprisonments, Pillagings, Banishments, Scourgings, Stigmatizings, &c. nor condemn we the worthy Martyrs, and the Sufferings of others, only we give the Lord Justice, and vindicate his tarrying; for now the Furnace has brought forth a more pure Cause, which we term, Holiness to be built upon the Word of God.

That all may know and see our Innocency, and know our End is and was the Glory of God, in all we did, though we came far short; and, in the Months past, we could get none to shew us Kindness for Meat or Lodging, though we could pay for it our selves: That Word in Malachi, Ye are cursed with a curse, for ye have robbed me, even the whole Nation: And likewise in Deuteronomy, We seeing the Land all thus cursed, and all justifying themselves in that Iniquity, were afraid to eat, or drink, or sleep under a Roof with them. Though there were many that would have sheltered us, yet we could not eat, drink, converse, or pray with them, lest we had come under the Curse; so many times our Beds have been in the open Fields, and we have come to Houses, and they would not sell us Meal to make Pottage of, and we have found Meal and Water a rare Dish, because the Curse was off it, and it was blessed to us, according to that Scripture, The Blessing of the Lord maketh rich. We are not murmuring in this, but when the Weather has been worst, Winds and Rain, cold Frost and Snow, and when we had fasted most, we were best satisfied, according to that Scripture, All shall work together for their Good that truly seek the Lord: When we had outward Straits, then we had most inward Peace, we had Joy in the Holy Ghost; so the Thing the World calls the worst of our Life, as Reproaches, Imprisonments, Nakedness, Hunger, and Cold, &c. we had rather be suffering for our Lord's sake, than be Kings of the whole Earth; for our Joy no Man can take from us, and our Prison is so pleasant through our Lord, that we care for no Company, for we know no Company but all are cursed, and we know not what it is to weary; but, according to that Scripture, Eat and drink, my beloved, yea, eat and drink abundantly, we are rather in Paradise.

These Things were cleared to us when fasting and praying, and we were pressed to do this by the Holy Ghost. We had many Fasts about this Thing, and this Week we took some Milk and Bread, in the third Day of the Week, in the Morning, being the 24 Day of the fifth Month, 1681. and tasted neither Meat nor Drink, nor any other Kind of living, till the sixth Day of the Week, at Four after Noon, (and then we took a little Milk and Bread) for to find out the Causes of his Wrath, we have wandered, mourned, wept many a Night and Day, in Houses and Fields, for we have, and have had no other End but his Glory, that the Elect, such as should be saved, might be brought in; and it is only Conscience that keeps us from giving Men Reverence in Word and Behaviour, though some call us dumb Devils, and unlearned Brutes; and one of us, when coming before them they call Rulers, was called a Blockhead. Notwithstanding of all that came on us, we know, and are taught by the Holy Scriptures, to give Honour unto whom Honour is due, and to salute one another; but it has been our Work of a Time, to renounce the filthy vile Imbracings, Salutations, and Compliments of this Generation, which they call Court-breeding; our Carriage, professing to follow the Lord Jesus, should be staid and circumspect, according to that Scripture, Let us walk circumspectly, not as Fools, but as wise Men, as it is written in Matthew, Let your Light so shine before Men, that they may see your good Works, and glorify your Father which is in Heaven.

Curled are they that say Peace to a Land, who are in the place of Watchmen, when the Lord says no Peace; which Practice we silly unlearned Creatures renounce, for we bless him, he has kept us from resting till the Ark rest: And as for these they call Watchmen, that cry Peace, or keep Silence, we shall refer them to the Prophet Ezekiel, which ye may read at leisure, which we think shall be Scotland's Doom; for we have heard tell of few of them they call Ministers, but they have all said Peace, when brought before the Enemies to witness their Practice, being most unconscionable, on Hill-sides and Muir-sides, before several Thousands, they called them Tyrants, and intolerable Oppressors, and their Government Tyranny and Oppression, and that the Crown of Supremacy that Charles Stuart had usurped over the Kirk, would weigh him down from the Throne, and all that Race with him; and when they are brought before them, and into Prisons, nothing but in with the other Supplication, to the honourable Lords of his Majesty's secret Council, beek and bing, and please your Lordships Grace, &c. and now they are all at Peace with his Enemies, save one whom we disown; and so ere long the Enemies shall curse them, when the Lord awakens their Consciences, (though we confess we have had some special Witnesses of Ministers) and we think, ere long, the Malignants shall pursue these Ministers to Death for Unfaithfulness; for the vilest Creatures in the Land, high and low, rich and poor, noble and ignoble, must give account for Works done in the Flesh; then the Dogs, Sorcerers, Whoremongers, and Murderers, and Idolaters, False-swearers, Cursers, Sabbath-breakers, idle loose Livers, and all that are unchaste in Thoughts, Words and Behaviour, and all that make no Conscience of their Way, and whosoever loveth and maketh a Lie, shall tremble that Day when they shall enter into Eternity; when it shall be said, as it was to Dives, Thou in thy Lifetime hadst thy good Things, and Lazarus his bad Things; for except a Man be born again, he can in no ways enter into the Kingdom of Heaven.

We take up the Book of the Holy Scripture, at the Lord's Command; and, for a Testimony of our Dissatisfaction at the abounding Corruptions both of Translators and the Press, and likewise for a Testimony of our Desires and Intentions for a new Translation and Impression, free of the foresaid and other Abuses, we, to our Power, reform our own Books, and say, that the Word of God needs no human Art: We hold, that the Word of God is laid the Foundation of this new Building, and shortly it shall become the head Corner-stone of the Building, over both Kirk and State, Kirkmen, and Statesmen: So that Scripture, towards the End of the Revelation of John, shall be fulfilled: And I saw Heaven opened, and behold, a white Horse, and he that sat upon him was called, Faithful and true, and in Righteousness he doth judge and make War, his Eyes were as a Flame of Fire, and on his Head were many Crowns, and he had a new Name written that no Man knew but he himself, and he was clothed with a Vesture dyed in Blood, and his Name is called, The Word of God.

And first, to shew that we take the Word of God, in every Point, to be our Rule, the Sum and End of our so much reproached and mocked at Exercise, ( Fasting and Prayer ) will be found in the Book of Psalms, Be thou exalted, O God, above the Heavens; and let thy Glory be above all the Earth. It is written in the Acts of the Apostles, It seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us; but, they usurping Supremacy, say, By the Authority of the General Assembly, allow these Psalms to be sung in Congregations, &c. which we renounce. And more, we think the Psalms Book in Metre, and no other Thing, ought to be within the Bounds of the Bible, but the simple Scriptures of Truth; the Psalms may be had in a Book by themselves.

We are so reproached and calumniated, that we are forced to make our Defence, and shew that we have mourned, fasted, and prayed, many a Day and many a Night, this last Winter, many times in the open Fields, in Frost and Snow, while our Clothes were frozen upon us, and our Feet frozen in our Shoes, as the Town of cursed Borrowstounness can witness; and all this to find out the Causes of our Lord's tarrying, when those who are now calling us Devils, were turning themselves upon their ivory Beds, like a Door upon the Hinges, eating the Fat and drinking the Sweet, at their own Ease: And when we were driven thence by Persecution, we took our selves to the Fields, holding still by our Duty, where many Women did offer themselves to the Work, with whom our Spirits were many a Time burdened, whom we could not put away ( as our blessed Lord dealt with Judas, whom he knew would betray him ) without manifest Causes: We stayed not with them but on solemn Days, such as Sabbaths, and appointed Times for publick Meeting; but when they took their Rest betwixt Hands, we continued still in Fields, Nights and Days, fasting and praying, for Two or Three Days together, several Times; and it was always their Fear we should propose some Question, to try them for Separation, and that Night before we were taken, we warned them that the Soldiers would come, and told them to use their Freedom: We saw them also a Mile off, an Hour before they came, and none of them would go away; and after we were brought in hither, after some several Days Fasting and Prayer, we being warned by the Holy Ghost, followed Esther's Advice, and continued from 8 a Clock of the Morning, the 24 Day of the 5 Month, till the 27 at 4 after Noon, fasting and praying: We sent them Word likewise to fast and pray, and when we sent them the Answer of our Prayers in Writ, they called us Devils; thence we fasted till the 28 Day at Night, and thence till the 30 at Night, waiting still to see if they would recover, but they waxed still worse, and we were forced to write this to vindicate our Carriage towards them.

Mr. Cargil's Letter to the Prisoners in the Canongate Tolbooth. N<sup>o</sup>. LXXIV.

Dear Friends,

I Think ye cannot but know that I am both concerned and afflicted with your Condition, and I would have written sooner, and more, if I had not feared that you might have been jealous ( under your Dissemblers ) that I had been seducing you to follow me, and not God and Truth. It has been my earnest and frequent Prayer to God ( as he himself knows ) to be led in all Truths, and I judge I have been in this graciously answered; but I desire none, if they themselves judge it not to be Truth, to adhere to any Thing that I have either preached, written, or done, to any Hazard, much more to the Loss of Life: But I have been afflicted with your Condition, and could not but be more if God's great Graciousness, in this begun Discovery, and your Sincerity and Singleness gave me not Hope that God's Purpose is to turn this to the great Mercy of his poor Church, and yours, if ye mar it not; and yet the great Sin and Pillar of Satan, that is in this Snare, makes me tremble. It was God's Mercy to you, that gave you such Convictions, that made you, at least some of you, once to part with these Men; and it was undoubtedly your Sin that you continued not so, but, after Convictions, did cast your selves in new Temptations, for Convictions ought to be tenderly guided, lest the Spirit be grieved from whom they came: But this second Discovery, tho' it be with a sharper Rebuke, as it makes God's Mercy wonderful, so it shall render your Perseverance in that Course, sinful, and utterly inexcusable, for God has broken the Snare, and it will be your great Sin if you go not out with great Haste, Joy and Thankfulness, when God's wonderful Discovery has made such a Way for your Delivery: For God having now shewn you the Ringleaders and Authors of these Opinions to be Persons of such Abominations, calls you, not only to deny Credit to them, but also to make a serious Search of their Tenets, which will, I know, by his Grace, bring you undoubtedly to see that these Things are contrary, both to God's Glory, and Truth that they so much pretend to.

And now, dear Friends, as I cannot be tender enough of you, who, in your Zeal and Singleness have been misled; for tho' this did bewray a great Simplicity and Unwatchfulness, yet it did also betoken some Zeal and Tenderness, that being beguiled, it was in Things that were veiled and busked with some Pretences to God's Glory, and publick Reformation. And, on the other Hand, I cannot have great enough Abhorrence of the Persons, who, knowing themselves to be of such Abominations, did give out themselves to be of such Familiarity with God, and of so clear Illumination to make their Delusions more passing with devout Souls. Let nothing make you think this is Malignity, or natural Enmity against the Power of Godliness, er Progress in Reformation, that is venting it self in me: For tho' I cannot win forward, as I ought, yet I have joyced to see others go forward. And I am sure there lies, in this Bed, within you, a Viper and a Child: Satan transforming himself into an Angel of Light, hath put these Two together, to make it passing with some, and to be spared of others who are of Tenderness; but my Soul's Desire is to kill the Serpent, and keep the Child alive; and God is calling you loudly to sever the good from the bad, that the Wit of Satan's Subtily has mixed together, and deliver your selves speedily as a Roe from the Hand of the Hunter; and not only return, but bitterly mourn for your high provoking of God, in offering such foul Sacrifices to his Glory, and sowing your old Clouts upon that new Garment; in your making the Enemy more to despise that Cause and Company, who are enough despised already, and discouraging those who were following, and going forward with you in that which was right, so that now, neither have they the Heart or the Hand for the Work, nor can they look out till God recover them again. There is much in the whole of those that may, and do weigh and overwhelm some Spirits, but there is nothing in all their Cogitations about it, that they found comfortable, unless it be, that he is cleared in afflicting us, and continuing to afflict, because there were such Persons among us. I speak this but of some of you, and beloved by us, tho' ignorantly; and we wish that this be the last and great Stop, that was to be removed before his coming to revenge himself, and reign. I would not say, but, by this also, he shewed his Tenderness of preserving Integrity of Doctrine and sound Reformation, and his Purpose not to suffer Errors and Heresies to prosper. This I told you when I met with you, that there were some Things ye were owning, which were highly approved of God, such as, an inward heart Love and Zeal to God's Glory, which I perceived to be in some of you, so far as can be perceived, and setting up of that before you as your End, in pursuing it always as your Work, and a forgetting of all other Things in regard of it, excepting only these Things without which we cannot glorify him (as a Workman, that intends his Work, must mind his Tools) even our own Salvation, and the Salvation of all others, as if there were not Things wherein he is greatly glorified, for his Glory is in Righteousness and Mercy, and in and by these is the Salvation of Man infallibly advanced, and to these it is inseparably connected.

Next, I would advise you to set apart more, yea, much more of your Time, for Humiliation, Fasting and Prayer in such an Exigence, when the Judgments of God appear to be so near, and so great, so that it be done without Sin, for God cannot be glorified by Sin; for if my Lie hath more abounded to his Glory, why am I judged as a Sinner? I was against such as deny Nature, and others, their right Dues; for he that allows Dues to others, allows them to be paid also: And we must be like Prisoners who are of great Debt, and honest Hearts, who know they cannot pay every one their full Sums, yet are resolved to give every one some, and to the greatest most, and to the rest accordingly; and as there cannot be a total Abstinence from Meat without Self-murder, so there cannot be a total Denying others their Dues, such as the Benevolence of Husband to Wife, and a total Abstaining from Work, without a Transgression of God's Commandments and Laws, which can never be a glorifying of him, which the more impartially they are kept, the more he is glorified. Next, Ways are allowed of him that ye may make your selves free, so much as in you lies, of all the publick Defections. Whatever may involve you in these, or contribute to their Upholding, without either an overpowering Force, or an indispensable Necessity; for I may buy Meat and Drink in Necessity, whatever Use the Seller make of that Money I give for my Meat and Drink. Next, he allows these Particulars of Reformation, such as Change of the Names of Days, of Weeks, of Terms of the Year, and such like, warranted by the Word, and Example of the Christians in Scripture, that have been neglected before in our Reformation; so that there be not too much Religion placed in these Things, and other Things more weighty (which undoubtedly have more moral Righteousness in them) made little in regard of them; but, in these good Things, Satan will quickly (if it be not already) overdrive you in your Progress, and leave you only to hug a spurious Birth: But there are other Things ye maintained, when I spoke with you (and the Viper has more since appeared) as Truths and Parts of God's Glory, that are utterly contrary to, and inconsistent with the Glory of God, as first, laying aside of publick Preaching, some of them saying no less nor they had no missing of it, so that ye thought ye had reigned as Kings without us, and would to God ye had reigned. Your flourishing should have delighted, tho' we had not been the Instruments and Means thereof: But, alas! this your Liberty, that you so much bragged of, would have lasted but a little while, and was among your other Beguiles, and was nothing else but Satan stirring you about to Giddiness, and raising of fantastick Fumes to the tickling of the Imagination, but leaving you altogether without Renovation of Heart, or Progress in Sanctification; so that I cannot compare this your Liberty to any Thing else, but to an enchanted Fabrick, where the poor Guests, only placed in Imagination, imagine themselves to be in a pleasant Place, and at royal Entertainment: But when God comes, and Delusion evanisheth, they will find themselves cast in some remote Wilderness, and they left full of Astonishment and Fears.

I told you while I was with you, that the Devil was sowing Tares amongst your thin Wheat; but I was not long from you, exercised in Thoughts about you, but I saw clearly there was Sorcery in the Business, and now, I tell you, I fear Sorcerers also. I know I have spoken this against my own Life, if they get the Power they desire, but I am in a Defiance of them, and, I know also, in a Defence by him who hath preserved, and, I know, will preserve me till my Work be finished: But if your Liberty that you talked of, had been true, it would, at least, have stayed till it had brought you to other Thoughts, other Works, and other Comforts; and it might have been easily discerned, not a true Liberty, but a Temptation that led you from publick Preaching, the great Ordinance of God's Glory, and Mens Good. As the Apostle has that Word, forbidding us to preach to the Gentiles; but especially to leave publick Ordinances at this Time, when they are the only Standards standing, which shews Satan's Victory against Christ's Kingdom in Scotland, not to be complete.

Yet, dear Friends, when you hear this, let not Satan cast you as far to the other Side, for it is rare to see the most devout Souls altogether out from under his Delusions and Temptations, as to make you believe, that it is impossible to attain to any Thing of Certitude, of Truth, Liberty, Manifestations and Communion with God, if that, which seemed to be so firm, be Delusions; but shall Satan have such Power to make Men believe Lies, and shall not God go infinitely beyond him in making Men to see and believe Truth? There were many that thought themselves at the Height of Assurance, when under the greatest Temptations, as Psal. lxxiii. Verily I have cleansed my Hands in vain. And yet they have a greater Certainty, when they come to see that there is no such Unquietness of Spirit under this, as they found in the former: And seeing it is so, rest not till ye attain that Assurance of your own Interest, and of his main Truths, which is both above Doubt and Defect, that ye may be able to say, Now we believe and are sure.

But, in the next Place, ye will joyn with none in publick Worship, but these who have infallible Signs of Regeneration: This seems fair, but it is both false and foul; false, because of its false Foundation, viz. that the Certainty of one's Interest in Christ, may be known by another; whereas the Scripture says, that none knows it but he that has it; foul also, for this Disdain hath Pride in it, and Pride is always foul; and tho' there be a Difference amongst Men, and that we should have Regard of Repentance and Brokenness of Heart; yet these who have well sought, and seen their own Filthiness, will judge themselves the Persons, of any that should be thrust out of the Assemblies of God's People, and that not only in regard of what they have been, but also in regard of what they daily are. Next, ye would have all to be prayed to eternal Wrath, who have departed and made Defection in this Time; alas! we need not blow them away, the great Part is going fast enough that Way, but this, I am sure, is not to give God his Glory, but to take from him, and limit him in his Freedom and Choice in the Greatness of his Pardon. It is remarkable, that the Angels, in their Glory to God, joyned also with it, Good-will to Men. Next, you have rejected the Psalms, with many other Things, by a Paper come from some of you, and I cannot see upon what account, unless it be because it is Man's Work, in turning the Psalms out of Prose into Metre: Then ye must reject all the other Scriptures, because the Translation of them is of Man's Work; ye have not yet learned the original Languages, ye must betake your selves altogether to the Spirit, and what a Spirit will that be that is not to be tried by the Scriptures! I told some of you, when I last saw you, that ye were too little led by the Scriptures, and too much by your own Thoughts and Suggestions, which indeed opens a wide Door to Delusion, and alas! lays your selves open to Satan's Temptations.

As for the rest, of your denying all your former Covenants and Declarations, this cannot be from God, they containing nothing but lawful and necessary Duties; and suppose they did not contain and include a complete Reformation, yet they did not exclude it: So that still holding them, we might have passed on to more Perfection, and they might be inviolable Obligations with us. And next, your cutting off all that were not of your Mind, and delivering them up to Devils, was not Justice and Religion, it being done neither in Judgment nor Righteousness, upon Conviction of their Crimes, but unbridled Rage and Fury; but these Things I cannot fully speak to now: Yet there is somewhat I cannot pass, but must tell you, that I fear there shall remain some of the Leaven within, that shall not only spoil an orthodox Protestant, but also a true, tender and humble Christian, and give us nothing instead of it, but a blown Bladder; for I am perswaded, if Satan should have the Tutorship but a while, he should bring it to this: For it has been his Way with some, first to make them Saint-like, and afterwards to settle them at Atheism, like a cunning Fisher, running a Fish upon an Angle, who at last casts it on dry Ground. God is my Witness, my Soul loves to see Holiness, Tenderness and Zeal, in such a Generation, where there is nothing but Untenderness, Unconcernedness, and Lukewarmness; and, by his Grace, I shall ever cherish it. I desire you then, in the Bowels of Christ, to retain your Zeal, but see well to this, that it be for his Glory. Indeed the more that you are zealous, and the further ye go forward, so that the Word of God direct your Course, ye are the more pleasing to God, and shall be the dearer to us: And perswade your selves, that tho' I cannot equal or go before, yet it is the sincere Desire of my Heart to follow such; and my Soul wishes you well, tho' it may be I cannot here point nor lead you the Way to well-being: Yet this I must say, that if I could lead you the Way that he has led me, I should let you see eternal Life, without these Things that I am desiring you to relinquish. Hold Truth, glorify God, be zealous to have him glorified, but think not, to desire the Condemnation of any Man, simply on that account, that they dare not come and continue where you are, or to put a Bar by Prayer, between them and a Return, is a glorifying of God. We glorify him in this Kind, when, as he himself desires, we acquiesce in his Sentence when it is past, tho' we wrestle against it before it be known to us.

I cannot bid you go forward in all, but I desire you to go forward in that which is surer and better; and, dear Friends, let not the World have that to say, that when ye are become right, ye are become the less zealous, only take the right Object, and let your Zeal grow. O! let not your Sufferings be stained with such Wildness, and think it not strange that ye have not such Liberty in your Return, as ye seemed to have before; if ye take the right Way and hold on, ye shall find it in his Time, greater, and better, and surer. I shall only add, that there must be an express disowning of your Errors and Evils, and an express owning of his Truths, whereof ye have been perswaded before now, which now are either denied or doubted, otherwise you will come to nothing of Religion, or worse. This will either state your Sufferings right, or be a Mean to obtain a cleanly Liberty from God, in his due Time. Grace, Mercy, and Peace be with you. Amen.

Council's Letter about the Earl of Argyle's Jurisdictions, Jan. 31. 1682. N<sup>o</sup>. LXXV.

May it please your Majesty,

THE Estate of Argyle being now in your Majesty's Hands, by Forfeiture, we thought it our Duty (your Majesty living at a Distance, and your royal Interest being so much forgot in the last Restoration of that Family) to offer humbly, as our faithful Advice to your sacred Majesty, that the Offices, Jurisdictions and Superiorities, belonging to the late Earl, should for ever remain with the Crown, as necessary for the Support, and for the Maintenance of your Royal Government; both which must suffer very much by

by the Want of such extraordinary Powers, and by raising a Subject in those remote Places to so formidable Capacities; nor seems it prudent or just to us, that so many loyal Families who have suffered by his, for your Majesty's Royal Father and your self, during the late Rebellion, should now again, for the second Time, be subjected to his Jurisdiction, whereby all honest Men might be discouraged to continue firm in a hopeless Loyalty: And tho' it may seem reasonable, that the Lands, which your Majesty designs to bestow upon that Family, should hold of your Majesty immediately, yet that others should hold their Lands of it, seems neither necessary nor legal to us, who have considered the Laws whereby hereditary Jurisdictions are prohibited; and by which it is declared unlawful to interpose a Superior betwixt your Majesty and those who are, by the Forfeiture, become your Majesty's immediate Vassals, the Dependence of which Vassals will certainly very much contribute to the securing your Majesty's Government, they being so many, so great, and so loyal; nor doubt we but your Majesty (whose Justice hath been still as eminent as your wonderful Clemency) will be careful to see the poor Creditors of the late Marquis and Earl of Argyle, satisfied out of their Estate, it being very hard that honest Men, whereof many have suffered for the Crown, should be forfeited for the Crimes committed by them against it; and to restore them to the others Prejudice, were to take an Estate from the innocent to gratify the Posterity of those who are guilty: For which Reason also, and to encourage such as resolve to be loyal, in this Age that needs so much Encouragement, we do, with all humble Confidence, intreat, that some Respect may be had to such as have been eminent Sufferers for the Monarchy, Suffering being as just, and as to your Majesty a more meritorious Debt than lending. We hope the Interests of the Bishops of the Isles and Argyle, and the retaining many Patronages, which belonged to that Family, will not need our Recommendation, being so just in themselves, and so fit for the Crown, that we could not omit the remembring of these also. This having been the unanimous Opinion of us your Majesty's Privy Council, will, we hope, prove not only a great Testimony of our Duty to your sacred Person, but will remain upon record to after Ages, as a Testimony of our Concern for the imperial Crown in this Kingdom, which shall in all Cases be faithfully observed, by

Letter, Scots Bishops about the Duke of York, March 9. 1682. N<sup>o</sup>. LXXVI.

May it please your Grace,

HIS Royal Highness having passed from hence on Munday last, being called by the King to attend his Majesty at New-market, we should prove very defective in Duty and Gratitude, if, upon this Occasion, we should forget to acknowledge to your Grace, how much this poor Church, and our Order do owe to his princely Care and Goodness, that his Majesty, and the worthy Bishops of England, may, from you, receive the just Account thereof.

Since his Royal Highness's coming to this Kingdom, we find our Case much changed to the better, and our Church and Order (which, through the Cunning and Power of their Adversaries, were exposed to extreme Hazard and Contempt) sensibly relieved and rescued; which, next to the watchful Providence of God (that mercifully superintends his Church) we can ascribe to nothing, so much as to his Royal Highness's gracious Owning, and vigilant Protection of us.

Upon all Occasions he gives fresh Instances of his eminent Zeal, against the most unreasonable Schism, which, by renting, threatens the Subversion of our Church and Religion, and concerns himself as a Patron to us, in all our publick, and even personal Interests; so that all Men take notice of his signal Kindness to us, and observe, that he looks on the Enemies of the Church, as Adversaries to the Monarchy itself: Nor did we ever propose, or offer to his Royal Highness, any rational Expedient, which might conduce for the Relief or Security of the Church, which he did not readily embrace and effectuate.

The Peace and Tranquillity of this Kingdom is the Effect of his prudent and steady Conduct of Affairs; and the Humours of our wicked Fanatics, are much restrained from dangerous Eruptions, upon their Apprehensions of his Vigilance and Justice; for they dread nothing so much, as to see him upon the Head of his Majesty's Councils and Forces against them.

We hope your Grace will make our dutiful Acknowledgment to his Royal Highness for all his princely Favours to us, and give him the most firm Assurance of our most sincere Endeavours to serve him, and of our most fervent Prayers for his temporal and eternal Happiness, as the bound Duty of us,

Council's Letter to the King about the Duke of York, May 20. 1682. N<sup>o</sup>. LXXVII.May it please your sacred Majesty,

THe great Satisfaction we had in hearing the many Demonstrations of your Majesty's Kindness to your Royal Brother, whilst he was so happy as to be with you, was much heightened by seeing him after his miraculous Escape at his Return to us, in which the Enemies of your Royal Family and Government may clearly discover, by what divine Care it is assisted and protected, and tho' the Kindness, Justice, and Moderation, and exemplary Loyalty, which he has evidenced during his Stay here, his compescing all our Disorders, his filling the orthodox Clergy, and such as had suffered for your sacred Majesty and your blessed Father, his filling all Places of publick Trust, and your Majesty's other Judicatures, with Persons fitted for the Employments to which they were designed, and the laying sure Foundations for a future Peace amongst us, make us unwilling to part with so kind, so wise, and so careful a Prince: Yet since your Majesty does, by your gracious Letter, dated the 29 of April, tell us, that your Majesty's brotherly Affection to him, moves you not to dispense longer with his Absence, than our Need did require; we do therefore dutifully acquiesce in your Majesty's Resolutions, and shall, with all possible Zeal and Assiduity, follow these excellent Patterns of Government which he has left us, hoping that your Majesty will receive from him most full Assurances of our Duty, which should very much increase upon our receiving so favourable an Acceptance from your Majesty, of our mean Endeavours for your Service, and that you will, by him, inform us of your Royal Inclinations and Commands, which shall be carefully obeyed by us. Such as are commisionate by your Majesty, for enquiring into the Counts of the Exchequer, and the Affairs of the Mint, have returned, to his Royal Highness, an Account of their Diligence, and why the same are stopped, which we humbly desire your sacred Majesty to consider, if his Royal Highness shall not be arrived before these Letters come to your Majesty's Hands, and in which we expect such speedy Returns, as may best answer to the Exigence of your Majesty's Service in these great Concerns. French King's Edict, March 1682. N<sup>o</sup>. LXXVIII.

LEWIS, by the Grace of GOD, King of France and Navarre: To all present and to come, Greeting. Although it be a certain and uncontested Truth, established upon the Words of Christ himself, that our Crown is independent of any Power but that of God alone, we have however received, with Satisfaction, the Declaration which the Deputies of the Clergy of France, assembled by our Permission, in our good City of Paris, have presented to us, containing their Opinion touching the ecclesiastical Power: And we have so much the more willingly hearkned to the Request which the said Deputies have made to us, to cause the said Declaration to be published; for that, it being made by an Assembly, composed of so many Persons equally recommendable for their Virtue and Learning, and who have, with so much Zeal, employed themselves in whatever may be of Advantage to the Church, and our Service, the Wisdom and Moderation with which they have expressed the Opinion that ought to be had on this Subject, may very much contribute to the confirming our Subjects in the Respect which they, as well as we, ought to have for the Authority which God has given to the Church, and to the taking away, at the same Time, from the Ministers of the pretended Reformed Religion, the Pretext they take from the Books of some Authors, to render the Power of the visible Head of the Church, and the Centre of ecclesiastical Unity, odious. For these Causes, and other good and weighty Considerations us thereunto moving, after having caused the said Declaration to be examined in our Council, we have, by this our present, perpetual, and irrevocable Edict, said, established and ordained, do say, establish and ordain, we will, and it pleaseth us, That the said Declaration of the Opinion of the Clergy, concerning the ecclesiastical Power, hereunto affixed, under the Seal of our Chancery, be registred in all our Courts of Parliament, Bailiwicks, Senechalshies, Universities and Faculties of Divinity, and the Canon Law, in our Kingdom, Countries, Lands, and Seigniories under our Obedience.

I.

WE forbid all our Subjects, and all Strangers being in our Kingdom, as well Seculars as Regulars, of what Order, Congregation, or Society they are, to teach in their Houses, Colleges or Seminaries, or to write any thing contrary to the Doctrine contained in the same.

II.

We command that those which shall for the future be chosen to teach Divinity in the Colleges of every University.

niversity, whether they be Seculars or Regulars, shall, before they perform that Function, in the Colleges, or Houses Secular or Regular, subscribe the said Declaration in the Registers of the Faculties of Divinity, and promise to teach the Doctrine therein contained; and that the Syndicks of the Faculties of Divinity, shall present to the Ordinaries of the Places, and to the Attorneys-general, Copies of the said Subscriptions, signed by the Registers of the said Faculties.

III.

That in all the Colleges and Houses of the said Universities, where there shall be many Professors, whether Seculars or Regulars, one of them shall be obliged every Year, to teach the Doctrine contained in the said Declaration; and in the Colleges, where there shall be only one Professor, he shall be obliged to teach the same every third Year.

IV.

We command the Syndicks of the Faculty of Divinity, to present every Year, before the opening of the Lectures, to the Archbishops or Bishops of the Places where they are established, and to send to our Attorneys-general, the Names of the Professors who shall have the Charge of teaching the said Doctrine; and we command the said Professors to present to the said Prelates, and to our Attorneys-general, the Writings which they shall dictate to their Scholars, when they shall be by them thereto required.

V.

We will, that no Batchelor, whether Secular or Regular, shall, for the future, be licensed in Divinity, or the Canon Law, nor received a Doctor, till he has maintained the said Doctrine, in one of his Theses, which he shall make appear to those that have Right of conferring the said Degrees in the Universities.

VI.

We exhort, and also enjoin all Archbishops and Bishops of our Kingdom, Countries, Lands, and Seignories under our Obedience, to imploy their Authority, in causing the Doctrine contained in the said Declaration of the said Deputies of the Clergy, to be taught in their Dioceses.

VII.

We command the Deans and Syndicks of the Faculties of Divinity, to take Care of the Execution of these Presents, on Pain of answering the contrary in their own and private Capacities.

So we give Charge to our Well-beloved and Trusty holding our Courts of Parliament, that they cause these our present Letters, in Form of an Edict, to be read, published, and registred, together with the said Declaration of the Clergy, in the Registers of our said Courts, Bailiwicks, Senechalities, and Universities, within their Jurisdiction, and that they see the same observed, without suffering any Contrivention therein, directly or indirectly; and that they proceed against the Offenders in such Manner as they shall think fit, according to the Exigency of the Case; for such is our Pleasure. And that the same may remain firm and established for ever, we have caused our Seal to be put to these Presents.

The Declaration of the Clergy of France, concerning the ecclesiastical Power.

Many there are who endeavour to invade the Decrees and Liberties of the Gallican Church, (with so much Zeal contended for by our Ancestors) and even to undermine the Foundation of them, which is built upon the holy Canons, and the Tradition of the Fathers; nor are those wanting, who, under pretence of those Liberties, are not afraid to lessen the Supremacy of St. Peter, and his Successors the Popes of Rome, instituted by Christ, the Obedience due to them from all Christians, and the Majesty of the Apostolick See, (revered by all People) wherein the Faith is preached, and the Unity of the Church preserved: Neither do the Hereticks omit any thing, whereby they may render the Power, by which the Peace of the Church is preserved, grievous and odious to Princes and their Subjects; and, by these Frauds, they withdraw the simple from the Communion of their Mother the Church, and of Christ. To prevent which Evils, we the Archbishops and Bishops, met at Paris by the King's Command, representing the Gallican Church, with other ecclesiastical Persons deputed together with us, have, after mature Deliberation, thought fit that the following Articles should be established and declared.

I.

That the Power of Things spiritual, and such as belong to our eternal Salvation, was given by God to St. Peter, and his Successors Christ's Vicars, and to his Church, but not that of Things civil and temporal, our Lord saying, My Kingdom is not of this World: And again, Render therefore unto Cesar the Things that are Cesar's, and unto God the Things that are God's; and this is meant by the Words of the Apostle, Let every Soul be subject to the higher Powers; for all Power is from God, and all Powers are ordained by God: He therefore that resisteth, resisteth the Ordinance of God. That therefore Kings and Princes are not, by the Command of God, subject in Things temporal, to any ecclesiastical Power, neither can they, directly or indirectly, be deposed by the Power of the Keys of the Church, nor their Subjects be freed from their Duty and Obedience, and Oath of Allegiance: And that this Opinion, necessary for the publick Peace, and no less useful to the Church than the State, is to be maintained, as altogether agreeable to the Word of God, the Tradition of the Fathers, and the Examples of the Saints.

II.

But that this full Power of Things spiritual, is so in the Apostolical See, and St. Peter's Successors the Vicars of Christ, as that with all the Decrees of the holy oeconomic Council of Constance, made in the fourth and fifth Sessions, concerning the Authority of general Councils, which have been approved by the Apostolical See, and confirmed by the Practice of the Popes of Rome, and of the whole Church, and always religiously observed by the Gallican Church, are in full Force, and continue unalterable; and that the Gallican Church condemns those that would take from the Force of those Decrees, as if their Authority was doubted, or less approved, or would apply them only to the Times of Schisms.

III.

That therefore the Use of this Apostolical Power, is to be moderated by the Canons made by the Spirit of God, and consecrated by the Reverence of the whole World; that likewise the Orders, Customs, and Statutes, received by the Crown and the Gallican Church, are of Force, and that the Bounds fixed by the Fathers ought to remain unremoved; and that it concerns the Greatness of the Apostolical See, that the Statutes and Customs, confirmed by the Consent of so great a See, and of the whole Church, should be established upon a firm Foundation.

IV.

That in Questions concerning Faith, the Pope has the chief Part, and that all and singular Churches are concerned in his Decrees; but that however his Decisions are not unreformable, without the Consent of the Church.

V.

Which Doctrines we have received from the Fathers, do decree to be sent to all the Gallican Churches, and to the Bishops, by the holy Spirit presiding over them, that we may all say the same Thing, and be all of the same Mind.

Signed by the Archbishop of Paris, President, the Archbishop of Rheims, Six other Archbishops, by Twenty six Bishops, and the rest of the Deputies of the Clergy.

Registered in the Parliament of Paris, the 23 of March, 1682.

CHARLES, by the Grace of GOD, &c. Greeting. Forasmuch as We having already thought fit to give and grant to John Graham of Claverhouse, a Commission to be Sheriff of the Shire of Wigtoun, fallen in Our Hands, with the haill Powers, Privileges, and Casualties belonging to the said Office, during Our Pleasure; and considering, that several Persons of disaffected and seditious Principles, in the Shires of Wigtoun and Dumfries, and the Stewartries of Kirkcudbright and Anandale, have, for Disquiet and Disturbance, of the Peace, for divers Years past, not only deserted the publick Ordinances in their Parish Churches, haunted and frequented rebellious Field-conventicles, and committed divers other Disorders of that Nature, to the great Scandal of Religion, and Contempt of Our Government, but lately did break forth into, and joyned in an open and most treasonable Rebellion, and notwithstanding of the many reiterated Offers of Our gracious Indemnity to them, they continue in their former wicked and rebellious Practices, being encouraged therein by the not due Execution of our Laws, and Hopes of Impunity, by their skulking from one Place to another, when they are cited before Our Judicatories, and pursued and sought for by Our Forces: And We being fully resolved, that Our Laws shall be put to due and vigorous Execution against these Delinquents, and these Rebels brought to publick Punishment and Example, in the Places where they have been guilty thereof, do, with Advice of Our Privy Council, require and command the said John Graham of Claverhouse, to call before him his Deputes and Substitutes, the Persons frequenting and residing in the said Shire of Wigtoun, guilty of withdrawing from the publick Ordinances, in their Parish Churches, since Our late Act of Indemnity, as also the Persons guilty of Conventicles, disorderly Baptisms and Marriages, harbouring and resetting of Rebels during the said Space, and to impose and exact the Fines conform to the Acts of Parliament, and to do and perform every Thing requisite and necessary, for putting the same to due and vigorous Execution; and considering, that the Persons guilty of these Disorders, do remove from one Jurisdiction to another, when they are called in question and pursued; and that We find it necessary for Our Service, in this Exigent, that the Persons guilty of these Disorders, in the Places adjacent, within the said Shire of Dumfries, and Stewartries of Kirkcudbright and Anandale, to be brought to Justice, in order to the reducing that Country to the due Obedience of Our Laws, and the securing the Peace of Our Government, We, with Advice foresaid, do hereby nominate and appoint the said John Graham of Claverhouse, to be Our Depute within the said Jurisdictions, for putting in Execution Our Laws against Transgressors and Delinquents, in the Cases foresaid, and to uplift and exact the Penalties incurred by them thereby. It is hereby declared, that this Commission is no ways to be prejudicial to the Right of Jurisdiction, belonging to the Sheriff of Dumfries, and Stewarts of the Stewartries of Kirkcudbright and Anandale, and that the said John Graham is only to proceed and do Justice in the Cases foresaid, when he is the first Attacker. And further. We, with Advice foresaid, have thought fit to give and grant, and do hereby give and grant to the said John Graham of Claverhouse, Our full Power, Authority, and Commission, as Justice in that Part, to call before him any Person, not being Heritor, who shall be apprehended for being in the late Rebellion, and have not in due Time taken the Benefit of Our gracious Act of Indemnity; and for that effect, to fence and hold Courts, create Clerks, Sergeants, Dempsters, and other Members of Court needful, and to call Assizes and Witnesses as often as Need be's, Absents to amerciate, Unlaws and Amerciaments to uplift and exact, and, in the said Courts, to put the said Persons to Knowledge and Trial of an Assize, and, according as they shall be found innocent or guilty, that he shall cause Justice to be administrate on them, according to the Laws and Acts of Parliament of this Realm; promitten. to hold firm and stable whatsoever Things he shall lawfully do in the Premises. Commission to Aitchison for Renfrew, June 8. 1682. N<sup>o</sup>. LXXXI.

CHARLES, by the Grace of GOD, &c. Greeting. Forasmuch as Alexander Earl of Eglintoun, Sheriff-principal of the Shire of Renfrew, being, for the present, forth of this Kingdom, and he having given a Deputation to Andrew Aitchison Writer in Edinburgh, to serve as Sheriff-depute of the said Shire, who being a Person that hath not any Interest therein, and finding it necessary for the Good of Our Service, that he should be advised and assisted in his Procedure, in Matters concerning the Government and publick Peace of the Shire, by the Persons underwritten, in whose Fidelity We have special Confidence: Therefore, We do hereby grant full Power and Commission to Alexander Lord Montgomery, Sir Archibald Stuart of Blackhall, William Hamilton of Orbistoun, James Ballantyne of Kelly, and Hugh Crawford younger of Jordanhill, or any Three of them, to meet amongst themselves, at such Times and Places as they shall think expedient, and to consider, propose, and set down in Writ, such Rules, Orders, and Directions, as they shall think fit to give to the Sheriff-depute of the said Shire, in his Procedure against Persons guilty of Conventicles, withdrawing from the publick Ordinances, disorderly Baptisms and Marriages, for delating, seizing upon, and apprehending such Rebels as do haunt within the said Shire, and vagrant Preachers, and for the pursuing and punishing of the Resetters of them; and to call before them the said Sheriff-depute, and to deliver to him their Instructions and Directions in the said Matter, who is hereby ordered to proceed according thereto, as he will be answerable; ordaining hereby Our said Commissioners, to give an Account from Time to Time of their Procedure, and the Procedure and Diligence of the said Sheriff-depute, in the Execution of Our Laws within the said Shire; and do hereby recommend to the Commanders of Our Forces, to assist Our said Commissioners, with such Parties as they shall think fit to call for, from Time to Time. And We do declare, that We will remember kindly the Service Our said Commissioners shall do Us, in the Execution of this Our Commission, and requite the same when Occasion shall offer; and this Our Commission is to continue until We think fit to recal the same. Given under Our Signet at Edinburgh, the Eighth Day of June, and of Our Reign the Thirty fourth Year, 1682.

CHARLES, by the Grace of GOD, King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith: To
 Our Lyon King at Arms, and his Brethren, Heralds, Macers of Our Privy Council, Pursevants, and Messengers at Arms, Our Sheriffs in that Part, conjunctly and severally, specially constitute, Greeting: Albeit, by the Blessing of almighty God upon Our royal Endeavours, the many Attempts of His and Our Enemies, (made most impiously under pretence of Religion and Zeal, against the Laws of God, of Nature, of Nations, and of this Our Kingdom, designing the Overthrow of Religion, Government, Liberty and Property) have been frequently disappointed and defeated, and their Malice turned upon their own Heads; and that the many Acts, both of Mercy and Justice, exerc'd by Us, conform to the Laws of God and the Kingdom, and the great Prudence, Vigilance, Moderation and Justice of Our dearest and only Brother, during his Abode in, and Government under Us, of this Our ancient Kingdom, have had such happy Success, as to bring Our good Subjects to further Abhorrence of Fanaticks and their Impieties; and most of these who were misled by the lying Spirit of some of their pretended Ministers, are shrunk from these Ways, whereof they are justly ashamed, so that Our People are brought nearer to that dutiful and peaceable Deportment, which becomes Christians and Subjects. Yet some are so indefatigable in Malice, as to continue and stir up others to disturb that Peace and Tranquillity, which Our People may enjoy under Our Reign: Infomuch as of late, some Traitors, Runnagates, and Fugitives, have convocate towards the Number of Eighty, with forbidden Weapons, and in unlawful Manner, near to Talla-lin, in the Shire of Peebles; and the People in that Country have been so defective in the Duties of loyal Subjects, or good Countrymen, as to neglect giving timeous Notice of such Meetings or Actings, either to Our Council, the Sheriff of the Shire, or the Commanders of Our Forces, who were nearest to them; and this Neglect of theirs, being not only a Breach of Duty in them, but of very bad Example, and dangerous Consequence, if practised by others on such Emergents: We therefore, by Our Royal Authority, and also in Conformity to the whole Course of Our Laws, particularly to the 144 Act of the 12 Parl. King James VI. and 7 Act, Parl. 1. King James I. do hereby strictly require and command all the Subjects and Inhabitants within this Our Kingdom, whether in Burgh or Land, upon Knowledge or Information that any Number of Men do convocate unlawfully in Arms, or appear in Company in any Place, or where any one or Two of such, as are declared Traitors or Fugitives from Our Laws, on treasonable Accounts, shall repair, that they shall with all Diligence give Intimation thereof to Our Chancellor, and such others of Our secret Council, as shall be at Edinburgh: As also, without Delay, that they give Information to any Commander of Our Forces, who shall be nearest to the Place where the said unlawful Convocation, or such Traitors and Fugitives are, and to the Sheriff of the Shire, Stewart of the Stewartry, Bailie of the Regality, or Magistrates of Burrows, where the said Meeting or Persons appear, or are informed to be, and that within the Space of one Hour at most, for every Three Miles Distance they are at the Time from Edinburgh, or from the nearest Commander of the Forces, Sheriffs and other Magistrates foresaid. And further, We do hereby require and command Our said Sheriffs, Bailies and Magistrates, upon any such Information given to them, that they call together competent Numbers of Our good Subjects, and with these do exact Diligence, at the utmost of their Power, to search, seek and apprehend these who are so met, and to present them to Justice, and to follow them until they be apprehended, or expelled out of their Jurisdiction, and on their Flight, they are immediately to acquaint the Magistrates of the next Shire, whither they are fled; who are hereby required to do the like Diligence, and so from Shire to Shire, until they be apprehended, or expelled forth of this Realm: And in case any Hurt or Skaith fall out in the Pursuit, or in apprehending of these so unlawfully convocate, the Actors thereof are to be free, and unpunished in any manner of way; with Certification, that these who ever fail in their said respective Duties, whether it be the Magistrates, in not Pursuance, or Our other Subjects, in not giving timeous Information, within the Space foresaid, or in not rising with, and assisting the Magistrates in their forementioned Duties, they shall be held and repute as disaffected to Our Government and Service, and as Art and Part, and Connivers with them in their said unlawful Designs and Convocations, and undergo the Punishment due to these who were of the said unlawful Convocation, by the Laws of this Our Kingdom. And We hereby of new intimate to all Our Subjects, that whoever shall intercommune with, refet, supply, shelter, or give any Comfort to any declared Traitors or Fugitives, or who shall conceal, refet or shelter any who do convocate, in manner foresaid: that such Refetters or Assisters shall be proceeded against, as if they were guilty of the Crimes whereof these Traitors and Fugitives are guilty, according to the just Rigour of Our Laws. Our Will is herefore, and We charge you straitly and command, that incontinent, these Our Letters seen, ye pass to the Market-crofs of Edinburgh, and the hail Market-crofses of the Head-burghs, and hail Parish Kirks of this Kingdom, and other Places needful, and there, in Our Name and Authority, by open Proclamation, make Publication of Our Royal Will and Pleasure, in the Premises, that none may pretend Ignorance, but give cheerful and punctual Obedience thereto.

thereto. The which to do We commit to you conjunctly and severally, Our full Power by these Our Letters, delivering them by you duly execute, and indorsed again to the Bearer.

CHARLES, by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith i or Messengers at Arms, Our Sheriffs in that Part, conjunctly and severally, specially constitute, Greeting.
Forasmuch as, in the whole Course of Our Government, We have manifested Our pious and princely Care, and Zeal to maintain and promote the sacred Interests of the established Religion, together with the Order and Unity of the Church; and considering the Danger arising to the Church, to Religion, and to Our Government, by the undutiful Practices of some of Our Subjects, in entertaining disaffected and irregular Persons, in the Offices of Chaplains, Pedagogues and Schoolmasters, who are apt to corrupt and poison the Families wherein they serve, and the Children whom they teach and instruct, with the Principles of Schism, Sedition and Rebellion, instilling into the Minds of Our People (under the specious Colour of Piety) sinful Prejudices against the settled Religion, and begetting in them a disloyal Aversion from Our Authority and Government; notwithstanding that, by the Fourth Act of the Second Session of Our First Parliament, it is statuted, That none be allowed to teach any Schools, or to be Pedagogues to Childeen, or Chaplains in any Family, without a Licence from the respective Ordinaries; and that, by the Sixth Act of Our Third and current Parliament, All such Pedagogues, Schoolmasters and Chaplains, are appointed to swear and sign the Test, under the Certification therein contained: As also, by Our Royal Proclamation, of the Date, at Edinburgh the first of March, 1676. We did require and command, That none thereafter should entertain any Schoolmaster, Pedagogue or Chaplain, or Person for performing Family-worship, who have not a Licence for that Effect, under the Hand of the Bishop of the respective Diocese, under the Penalties therein exprest. And now being informed, that some, to elude the Laws and Proclamations foresaid, do entertain disaffected and irregular Persons, for teaching their Children, and overseeing of their Learning, Manners and Education, or exercising Family-worship in their Houses, under other Names and Designations, as of Physicians, Factors, Chamberlains, Attendants, or ordinary Servants, whose Influence in corrupting the Youth, and debauching of Families from their Duty to God, and to Us, is most apparent, and of very pernicious Consequence. We do therefore, with Advice of Our Privy Council, strictly prohibit and discharge all Our Subjects, of what Quality soever, to entertain any Person or Persons, to be Chaplains in their Families, or to be Governors, Teachers or Instructors of their Children, or Pupils, or Minors, under their Tutorship or Curatorship, or to be Schoolmasters within their Lands or Jurisdictions, or who shall perform the Duties and Offices of teaching, and instructing their Children, or Pupils, or Minors, under their Tutorship or Curatorship, by overseeing them in their Learning, Manners and Education, or who shall exercise religious Worship in their Families, or shall perform the Duties belonging to the Places or Offices of Pedagogues or Chaplains, under the Names and Designations foresaid, or under whatsoever other Colour, Name, Title, or Designation, except such only as shall swear and subscribe the Test foresaid, before their respective Ordinaries; and who shall be allowed by Licences, under the Hands of their respective Bishops, for performing and exercising of these Offices; certifying all those who shall contemn, or contravene this Our Royal Will and Proclamation, that every Nobleman, so offending, shall be fined in Three thousand Merks; every Gentleman in Twelve hundred Merks; and each Burgess, or other Subject, in Six hundred Merks, toties quoties, as they shall be found guilty, conform to the Certification contained in Our said Proclamation, dated the said first of March, 1676. and shall also be esteemed Persons disaffected to the established Religion, and to Our Royal Government: And the Magistrates of all Burghs of Royalty and Regality, are discharged to permit any Schoolmasters to teach Scholars in their Burghs, except they be qualified as aforesaid, under the Penalty of being pursued and punished before the Council, as their Contempt and Neglect shall deserve. And to the effect Our Royal Will and Pleasure in the Premises, may be publicly known, Our Will is, and We charge you straitly, and command, that incontinent, these Our Letters seen, ye pass to the Market-crofs of Edinburgh, and other Places needful, and thereat, in Our Name and Authority, by open Proclamation, make Publication of the Premises, that none pretend Ignorance. The which to do We commit to you, conjunctly and severally, Our full Power, by these Our Letters, delivering them, by you duly execute, and indorsed again to the Bearer.

Commission

THe Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council considering, that several Heritors, and others within the Shire of Air, and Jurisdictions within the same, are indicted before the Justices for the Crimes of high Treason, and resetting of, and conversing with Rebels; and the Diets, from the several Courts, being continued, from the Justice-air that was to be held, to Edinburgh, in order to the Delinquents their Trial, and the Witnesses ordained to attend, yet, through the Witnesses Absence, the Trials are delayed for some Time. And the said Lords having resolved, that the Delinquents shall be brought to a speedy Trial, have thought fit, hereby to give and grant full Power and Authority to John Boyd of Kelburn, James Crawford of Ardmillan, Lieutenant Colonel Buchan, and Captain John Inglis, or any Two of them, to call before them such Witnesses as are contained in the porteous Rolls against the Delinquents of the said Shire, and hail Jurisdictions within the same, or any other Witnesses that can be discovered for proving the Crimes for which they are indicted, and to examine, or cause examine them, and the Witnesses to sign their Depositions, and if they cannot do it, to sign them themselves for them; and, with all possible Diligence, to return the same to his Majesty's Advocate, or the Clerk of the Justice-court; and, for that effect, to cause summon the said Witnesses to compear before them; and in case of their Absence, not only to amerciate them according to Law, but to apprehend and incarcerate them, until they give all Obedience; and, to that end, to affix and hold Courts at such convenient Places, as they shall think fit, and to create all Members of Court needful, except the Clerk who is to be appointed by the Clerk of the Justice-court: With Power likewise to the said Commissioners, or any Two of them, to enquire after any other Persons, Heritors as well as others, suspected guilty of Rebellion, or Reset of Rebels, and who are not contained in the porteous Rolls, and to examine Witnesses against them, and report the Depositions in manner foresaid. And further, the said Commissioners and their Quorum are hereby authorized to make exact Enquiry anent all Persons, who maliciously slander, contemn, or vilify those, who, for evidencing their Loyalty to his sacred Majesty, and Affection to the Government, have taken the Test, or otherwise given Obedience to his Majesty's Laws, and to send in an exact List of their Names and Designations, and the Probation, to his Majesty's Advocate, to the effect they may be proceeded against according to Law. And the said Commissioners are to give exact Obedience herein, and to return frequent Accounts, as aforesaid, as they will be answerable.

THe which Day, Forasmuch as the Lord Provost, Bailies and Council of Edinburgh, taking to their serious Consideration, how zealous and careful his sacred Majesty hath been since his happy Restoration, for suppressing all Conventicles, unwarrantable Meetings, and Conventions of his Subjects within this Kingdom, by several laudable Laws and Acts of Parliament made against the same: And also, that by the Seventeenth Act of the Third Session of his Majesty's Second Parliament, it is expressly statute and ordained, That all Magistrates of Burghs Royal shall call before them, all such as are Burgeses, as shall be guilty of keeping Conventicles, and proceed against them by fining, or otherwise, according to Law, and that they make an Account of their Diligence to his Majesty's Privy Council, and that they be careful in putting their Acts to due Execution against the Keepers of Conventicles, conform to the Trust and Power committed to them, and that an Account of their Proceedings be returned yearly to his Majesty's Privy Council, upon the first Day of July, under the Pain of 500 Merks, for each Year's Failure. They therefore, being sensible of the Duty and Trust committed to them by his Majesty and Estates of Parliament, and that it is absolutely necessary for his Majesty's Service, and for the peaceable and quiet Government of the good Town, and that all effectual Means be taken for suppressing of Conventicles within the City and Privileges thereof, which tends so much to the Prejudice of the publick Worship of God, to the Scandal of the reformed Religion, and is the Reproach of his Majesty's Authority and Government; and also, that the slow Progress hitherto made, in discovering and suppressing of Conventicles, unlawful Baptisms and Marriages, and entertaining of intercommuned and vagrant Persons, did proceed from this, that there was no due Encouragement or Reward promised and allowed to such Persons as should discover any Conventicles, or unwarrantable Meetings within this City and Privileges thereof, do therefore unanimously statute and ordain, that any Person who shall discover any Conventicle that shall be kept within the said City or Privileges thereof, or unlawful Baptisms and Marriages, and entertaining of intercommuned and vagrant Persons, to any of the Magistrates within the same, so that the said Conventicle be actually attacked, seized upon, and found in the Place discovered, and that the said unlawful Baptisms and Marriages, and the entertaining of intercommuned and vagrant Persons, be instructed, the said Persons Discoverers shall have, for their Reward, for each Conventicle, unlawful Baptism, or Marriage, or the entertaining of any intercommuned and vagrant Person that shall happen to be discovered, the Sum of Threescore Pounds Scots Money: And whosoever shall discover any Persons, whose Residence is in the Country, that come to the City to lurk, and absent themselves from their own Parish Churches, and withdraw from the publick Worship in the City, shall have, for each Person, Twelve Pounds for their Pains: And in regard that the Lord Provost, Bailies, &c. intend a vigorous Execution of his Majesty's good Laws, against Separation and withdrawing from the established publick Worship, they do hereby require all the Citizens, and other Inhabitants whatsoever in the said Burgh and Jurisdictions thereof, duly to attend the publick Ordinances and Worship; certifying all such as shall absent themselves, or withdraw therefrom, that they shall be impartially fined according to Law. And for Encouragement of these who shall delate any Person so withdrawing, who are not contained in the

Lists

Lists given up to the Magistrates by Persons authorized for that effect, shall have Six Pounds Scots instantly paid unto him, providing always the Person or Persons, so delated, be convicted guilty of withdrawing, as aforesaid. And ordain this present Act to be proclaimed through the City by Tuck of Drum, and printed, that none pretend Ignorance.

God save the King.

CHARLES, by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith :
 To Our Lyon King at Arms, and his Brethren, Heralds, Macers, Pursevants, and Messengers at Arms, Our Sheriffs in that Part, conjunctly and severally, specially constitute, Greeting. Forasmuch as We, by Our gracious Letter, under Our Royal Hand, directed to Our Privy Council, dated, at Our Court at New-market, the 21 of March last, did signify how well We were satisfied with the Account We had lately received of the State of Affairs, in this Our ancient Kingdom, and with the successful Methods Our Council had fallen upon, for settling the Peace therein, and reducing People to Order and Conformity; and, in this Exigence, did think fit it should be made known to Our People by Proclamation, that, tho' We have been too often induced to grant Indemnities and Indulgences, and other Favours, to that fanatick and disaffected Party, which (as Time and Experience have shewn) had no other Effects than to encourage them to further Disorders, and embolden them to abuse Our Royal Goodness, whatever fair Hopes were given Us at the procuring of them: Yet it was still, and is now, more than ever, Our Royal Inclination, and firm Resolution, to extirpate and root out these seditious and rebellious Principles, and to maintain the Church Government as it is established by Law. And seeing we are now fully perswaded, that it is neither Difference in Religion, nor Tenderneſs of Conscience (as is pretended) but merely Principles of Disloyalty and Disaffection to Us and Our Government, that moves them (under Pretext of Religion) to disturb the Quiet of Our Reign, and Peace of this Our ancient Kingdom: Therefore We do strictly require Our Privy Council, and all Our Judges and Magistrates, to put the Laws vigorously in Execution against all Persons, who, since Our late Indemnity, have been, or shall be hereafter found guilty of any fanatical Disorders or Irregularities (especially those who continue obstinate in them.) And seeing We are informed, that several of Our Subjects, are so disloyal to Us, and inhumane to their Country, as to harbour, reſet, and entertain the Disturbers of its Peace, open and declared notour Rebels and Traitors: We do therefore likewise command, that all such Persons as are, or shall be found guilty of reſetting, maintaining, harbouring, intercommuning, conversing with, or doing Favours to Persons who are forfeited, Traitors, or denounced and regiſtrate at the Horn for Rebellion, be pursued before Our Justice-court, and punished as Traitors, according to Law: And tho' all Persons guilty of reſetting, maintaining, harbouring, intercommuning, conversing with, or doing Favours to notour and known Rebels, that have actually been in the Rebellion (albeit neither forfeited as Traitors, nor denounced and regiſtrate at the Horn for Rebellion) may be also punished with the Pains of Treason; yet, lest any of Our Subjects may have fallen unhappily in that Mistake, because of the great Number of Rebels, that, for several Years, have haunted and frequented some Parts of Our western and southern Shires, We, in Our Royal Prudence and Clemency, recommend to authorize and empower Our Privy Council, that, as they shall see Cause, they may give Warrant to, and command Our Advocate to cause summon, and cite before them, such Persons as they have reason to suspect, to be guilty of the Crimes of reſetting, maintaining, harbouring, intercommuning, conversing with, or doing Favours to any notour and known Rebels, that have been actually in the Rebellion; and which Rebels have not been forfeited as Traitors, or denounced and regiſtrate at the Horn for Rebellion, before the Time these Persons reſetted, harboured, maintained, or intercommuned, conversed with, or did them Favour; as also all Persons guilty of intercommuning, or conversing (even with forfeited Rebels, or denounced and regiſtrate at the Horn) occasioned by Chance and Accident; and We do authorize and empower Our Privy Council, to judge them upon Probation of Witnesses, or Oath of Party, as they shall see most convenient for Our Service; and in case they refuse to depone, or to appear when cited personally, or at their Dwelling-houses, or at the Market-cross of Edinburgh, Pier and Shoar of Leith, if out of the Kingdom, to hold them as confessed, and to reſtriſt the ordinary Pains of Treason, to Banishment, Fining, or other arbitrary Punishment. Likeas, We do hereby declare, that such Persons, so judged by Our Privy Council, shall, upon Absolvitor, or satisfying of the Sentence, be as fully secured and indemnified, as to these Crimes, for which they shall be so judged by them, as if they had a particular Remission, for each of these Crimes, under Our Great Seal: And being also perswaded, that Our Privy Council will use all Diligence, to bring to condign Punishment, such who deserve the same, and desirous to secure Our Subjects, We do declare, that after the Space of Three Years, from the first of January, 1684. no new Process shall be raised, nor any Person pursued (save only such as have been cited within the foresaid Time) upon the Head of reſetting, maintaining, harbouring, intercommuning, conversing with, or doing Favours to forfeited Rebels, or others, acted, done, or committed at any Time preceeding the first of May, 1683. We do likewise give to Our Privy Council full Power and Authority, when they shall find it necessary for Our Service, to commissionate such as they shall think fit in the respective Shires, for judging those they have not Time or Conveniency to call before themselves, and are guilty of reſetting, maintaining, harbouring, intercommuning, conversing with, or doing Favours to Persons who are notour and known Rebels, and who have been actually in the late Rebellion, tho' not forfeited, nor denounced and regiſtrate at the Horn for Rebellion; as also, all Persons guilty of intercommuning, or conversing, even with forfeited Rebels, or denounced and regiſtrate at the Horn, occasioned by Chance and Accident, and that in the same Way, and with the same Powers that We have hereby allowed

lowed to Our Council. And because several of Our Commons, that were engaged in the late Rebellion, may have (through Ignorance) lost the Benefit of Our Indemnity, by not taking the Bond in due Time, and are yet desirous to return to their Duty, We do declare, that all such who shall take the Test, before Our Privy Council, or Our Justiciary, or any commissioned by the Council, any Time betwixt this and the first of August next, shall, and are hereby declared to be as sufficiently indemnified, as they would have been if they had taken the Bond in due Time. And for that effect, and for punishing such as refuse thus to be reclaimed, We do hereby also order, that Circuit Courts be holden in Our western and southern Shires, and other Places needful, in the Months of May, June, July, or August next; and that after Our Council hath caused take up exact porteous Rolls of all such who are guilty of, or accessary to the late Rebellion, that have not the Benefit of Our general Indemnity, or special Remissions, or are otherwise cleared and acquitted by Law, their Names, after they shall be denounced Fugitives, be printed, published, and affixed upon all the Market-crosses within this Kingdom, to the end all Our dutiful Subjects may know, both whom to shun, and whom to apprehend. After all which Declarations of Our Royal Pleasure, We expect that none will dare to adventure to commit any of the foresaid Crimes, being fully resolved, not to shew further Favour or Clemency to any who hereafter shall be found guilty thereof. Our Will is therefore, and We charge you strictly, and command, that incontinent, these Our Letters seen, ye pass to the Market-crosses of Edinburgh, and to the whole Market-crosses of the head Burghs of the Shires and Regalities of this Kingdom, and other Places needful, and thereat, by open Proclamation, make Publication of the Premises, to the effect all Persons concerned may give Obedience, and conform themselves to Our Royal Pleasure aforesaid. And further, in prosecution of the Ends and Designs foresaid, We, with Advice of Our Privy Council, have thought fit hereby to ordain and appoint Our Circuit Courts of Justiciary, to be holden and kept by the Commissioners and Judges thereof, at the Places and Burghs, and upon the Days, and for the Shires respective after-specified, viz. at the Town of Stirling the Fifth of June next, for the Shires of Stirling, Clackmannan, Kinross, Fife and Perth, besouth the River of Ern, and the Stewartry of Menteith; at the Town of Glasgow the Twelfth Day of the said Month, for the Shires of Lanerk, Renfrew and Dumbarton; at the Town of Air the Nineteenth Day of the said Month, for the Shire of Air, and Jurisdictions within the same, and the Shire of Wigtoun; at the Town of Dumfries the Twenty sixth Day of the said Month, for the Shire of Dumfries, the Stewartries of Kirkcudbright and Anandale; at the Town of Jedburgh, the Third Day of July, for the Shires of Roxburgh, Berwick, Selkirk, Peebles, and Bularies of Lawderdale; at the Town of Edinburgh the Tenth Day of July, for the Shires of Edinburgh, Haddingtoun and Linlithgow. Whereof We ordain you to make Publication at the Market-cross of Edinburgh, as also at the Market-crosses of the head Burghs of the Sheriffdoms of Stirling, Clackmannan, Kinross, Fife, Perth, Lanerk, Renfrew, Dumbarton, Air, Wigtoun, Dumfries, Jedburgh, Selkirk, Peebles, Dunfermline, Lawder, Haddingtoun and Linlithgow, wherethrough none pretend Ignorance of the same, that the said Justice-courts are to be holden upon the Days, and at the Burghs and Places respective above-written: And that ye command and charge all Archbishops Dukes, Marquisses, Earls, Bishops, Lords spiritual and temporal, Barons, and others Our Freeholders, who hold Lands of Us in chief, and ow Suit and Presence within the several Bounds, Shires and Precincts belonging to the said respective Circuits Courts, to compear before the said Commissioners at the said Courts, upon, and at the Days and Places foresaid, with Continuation of Days, to do whatever in Law is incumbent, and ought to be done by them in that behalf. As also, that ye command and charge all and sundry the said Dukes, Marquisses, Earls, Lords spiritual and temporal, as also, Lords of Regalities, Stewarts, Barons, Sheriffs, Justices of Peace, Bailies, Chamberlains, Magistrates, and Ministers of Our Laws, and all subordinate Judges within Our Sheriffdoms above-written, and whole Lieges of the same, that they, and every one of them give all due Respect to Our Commissioners and Justices foresaid, and such special Assistance as to their Offices and Duties appertains, and as is incumbent to them by the Laws and Acts of Parliament of this Kingdom, as oft as they shall be required by Our Commissioners, to that effect, as they and every one of them will answer upon the contrary, and under all highest Pain and Charge that after may follow; and particularly, that ye command Our Sheriffs, that they cause sufficient and legal Men compear before Our said Commissioners, at such Diets and Places as the Commissioners shall appoint for Assizes and Witnesses, as they shall be cited to that effect. As also, that the said Sheriffs and Freeholders within the several Shires foresaid, meet Our said Justices at their Entry into the Shire, and convey them into the same, and accompany them during their remaining, ay and while they be received by Our next Sheriff, and his Deputes into the next Shire. And because there have been several great Abuses committed in taking and administering the late Bond, appointed by Our late Indemnities, and the Persons intrusted have been frequently imposed upon, by their being induced to admit Persons to take the said Bond under false Names and Designations, and that even many false Subscriptions have been returned through the Collusion of such as were illegally substitute by the Persons intrusted: Therefore We ordain, that all these Commons, who shall apply themselves for having the Benefit of the Test, shall take the same, repeating the Words upon their Knees, in presence of any Two of the Persons aftermentioned, and a Clerk, who are appointed to return the Test, so subscribed, to the Clerks of Our Privy Council, betwixt and the first of September next, with a Certificate at the End thereof, subscribed by any one of the said Two Persons, or more present intrusted, and their Clerk, bearing the Time and Place when they did sign the same, and that they knew the Persons subscribing, to be of the Designations condescended upon, or were credibly informed by Persons they knew, that they were such, and where the Persons could not subscribe themselves, that they heard them give Direction to Two Notars, to subscribe for them; and which Test, so subscribed, and returned, and a Certificate granted thereupon, shall be as sufficient to the Subscribers, as if they had Our particular Act of Indemnity. The Persons intrusted by Us, are, all Privy Counsellors, Lords of the Session and Justiciary, Captains of Our Forces, and superior Officers upon the Place, Sheriffs, Stewarts, and Bailies of Regalities, or their Deputes, in their respective Jurisdictions, or Provosts of Burghs Royal, or the Bailies; as also the particular Persons underwritten, viz. John Dalmahey of that Ilk, Sir John Cowpar of Gogar, the Lord Elibank, William Murray of Spot, Sir William Ruthven of Dunglass, Adam Hepburn of Humby, Sharp of Houstoun, Alexander Mill of Carrin, the Lord Sinclair, Sir Philip Anstruther of that Ilk, Lindsay of St. Andrews, Sir William Sharp of Scotsraig, Sir Alexander Bruce of Broomhall, the Laird of Lee, Sir John Whiteford of Milltoun, John Skene of Hallyards in Lothian, Sir Robert Dalziel of Glenae, Sir Robert Grierson of Lag, Robert Fergusson of Craigdarvach, the Lord Montgomery, the Lord Crichton, the Laird of Blair, Sir Archibald

And to the effect, that the Persons allowed to take the Test, may have convenient Opportunities for taking the same, We do require the Persons foresaid, appointed for administering the Test, to meet amongst themselves, and condescend upon frequent Diets and Meetings, at convenient Places, and that they cause make timeous and publick Intimation thereof at Parish Kirks, and other Places needful, that all Persons concerned may know when and where to attend; and if any of the Persons, commisionate to administer the said Test, have not taken the same themselves, We appoint them first to take it in presence of some of those above-mentioned, who have formerly taken the same before they administer it to others. The which to do, We commit to you, conjunctly and severally, Our full Power, by these Our Letters, delivering them by you duly execute, and indorsed again to the Bearer.

God save the King:

English Declaration for Thanksgiving, September 9. 1683. No. LXXXIX.

CHARLES R.

IT hath been our Observation, that for several Years last past, a malevolent Party hath made it their Business, to promote Sedition by false News, libellous Pamphlets, and other wicked Arts; whereby they endeavoured not only to render our Government odious, and our most faithful Subjects suspected to the People, but even to incite them to a Dislike and Hatred of our Royal Person: Whereupon it was evident to us, that the Heads of this Party could have no other Aim, but the Ruin of us and our Government.

And whilst, by our utmost Care, we manifested to all our Subjects, our Zeal for the Maintenance of the Protestant Religion, and our Resolutions to govern according to Law, it was a great Trouble to us to find, that evil Persons, by misrepresenting our Actions to the People, should so far insinuate themselves into the Affections of the weaker Sort, as that they looked upon them as the only Patriots and Asserters of their Religion and Liberties, and gave themselves up entirely to their Conduct.

As their Numbers increased, so did their Boldness, to that Height, that by often shewing themselves in Tumults and Riots, and unlawful and seditious Conventicles, they not only engaged, but proclaimed an Impunity to their own Party, who thought themselves already too strong for the Laws, and they seemed to believe, that in a short Time they should gain upon the People, so as to persuade them to a total Defection from the Government.

But

But it pleased God, by these their violent Ways, to open the Eyes of our good Subjects, who easily foresaw what Troubles these Methods would produce, and thereupon, with great Courage, as well as Duty and Affection towards us, upon all Occasions, did manifest their Resolution and Readiness in defence of our Person, and Support of our Government, and the Religion established; and did likewise convince the common People of the villainous Designs of their factious Leaders, and the Miseries that would befall them in pursuing such Courses.

By these Means the factious Party lost Ground daily, and finding that it was impossible to keep up the Spirits of their Followers, against the Religion established, and the Laws, whilst we were steady in the Maintenance and Execution of them, became desperate, and resolved not to trust any longer to the slow Methods of Sedition, but to betake themselves to Arms, not doubting, but that they remained still strong enough, by Force to overturn the Government, which they could not undermine.

It is hard to imagine, how Men of so many different Interests and Opinions, could joyn in any Enterprize; but it is certain, they readily concurred in the Resolution of taking Arms, to destroy the Government, even before they had agreed what to set up in the place of it.

To which purpose, they took several Ways; for, whilst some were contriving a general Insurrection in this Kingdom, and likewise in Scotland, others were conspiring to assassinate our Royal Person, and our dearest Brother, and to massacre the Magistrates of our City of London, and our Officers of State, that there might be no Appearance of Government, nor any Means for our Subjects to unite for their Defence.

In case it had pleased God to permit these wicked Designs to have taken effect, there could have been nothing in Prospect but Confusion; for, instead of the Reformation they pretended, their Success would have produced Divisions and Wars among themselves, until the predominant Party could have enslaved the rest, and the whole Kingdom.

But the divine Providence, which hath preserved us through the whole Course of our Life, hath at this Time, in an extraordinary Manner, shewed it self in the wonderful and gracious Deliverance of us and our dearest Brother, and all our loyal Subjects, from this horrid and damnable Conspiracy.

As it is therefore our Desire, that all our loving Subjects should joyn with us, in giving Thanks to almighty God for this Mercy, so we thought it necessary they should be now, in some measure, informed of the Fact as it hath been discovered to us by undoubted Proof, and the Confession of divers of the Accomplices in this Conspiracy, whereof, though we have not as yet perfectly traced all the Particulars, the principal and main Designs of it, nevertheless, have appeared to be as followeth.

About the Beginning of October last, when the Heads of the Faction saw the Magistracy of our City of London settled in Persons of loyal Principles, they became impatient, and fell immediately to consult of rising in Arms; for which some thought their Party so well prepared, that they could not fail of attaining their Ends, whenever they should break out into open Force.

Whereupon there was a Meeting of some of the principal Conspirators, to agree about the best Means to master our Guards, and to seize our Person; but, upon Consideration, they found it necessary to prepare their Friends in the several Counties, as also the disaffected Party in Scotland, to joyn with them, without which, any Attempt in our said City, or upon our Guards, appeared too rash to be undertaken; so that they laid aside the Thoughts of a present Rising, and disposed themselves to find, by a Correspondence with Scotland and with several Parts of this our Kingdom, how far they might be assisted by a general Insurrection, so that they might not, in human Probability, fail of Success.

Whilst this first Design was forming, some Villains were likewise carrying on that horrid and execrable Plot of assassinating our Royal Person, and our dearest Brother, in our coming from Newmarket, and Money was deposited for that purpose: But by the Shortness of the Time, (we being then immediately upon our Return) and for Want of necessary Preparations, they were forced to defer the Execution of it till further Opportunity.

It was then proposed among them, whether they should attempt the same at our next going to Newmarket, in March last; but some objected, that our Guards, which usually remain here some time after our Departure, would be capable of making a great Opposition, upon the Arrival of the News. For which Reason, and because they were not then in a sufficient Readiness, it was agreed to be done at our Return from Newmarket.

The Place appointed, was the House of one Richard Rumbold a Maltster, called the Rye, near Hoddesdon, in the County of Hertford; and it was resolved, that Forty Persons in Number, who were to be Actors in this Assassination, under the Command of the said Richard Rumbold, should hide themselves in or near the said House; and, when our Coach should come over against them, then Three or Four were to shoot with Blunderbushes, at the Postillion and Horses, and, if they should fail of killing the Horses, some were to be ready in the Way, who, in the Habit of Labourers, should turn a Cart cross the Passage, and so stop our Coach: Others were appointed to shoot into the Coach, where our Royal Person, and our dearest Brother were to be, others to fire upon the Guards that should be then attending us. And it was further resolved, that, upon the same Day, many Lords and other Persons of Quality, whom they supposed favourable to their Design, should be invited to dine in our City of London, that they might be the more ready to appear among the Citizens, upon Arrival of the News, the Actors in the said Assassination having contrived the Manner of their Escape, by a nearer Passage than the usual Road; by which Means they hoped to get to London, as soon as the News could be brought thither.

They thought it would be easy, upon their perpetrating this horrid Fact, to possess themselves of the Government, presuming upon the Numbers of the disaffected.

But lest the Blackness of such an Action might deter any from joyning with them, they prepared to palliate it, as far as they could, by some Remonstrance or Declaration, which was ready to be printed and dispersed in that Confusion, to amuse the People: And lest our Officers of State, and the Magistrates of our said City, with the Militia thereof, and other our loyal Subjects, should be able to put some Stop to their Career, they resolved to follow this Blow with a Massacre, wherein they particularly designed for immediate Slaughter, our Officers of State, the present Lord Mayor, and Sheriffs, and the Magistracy of our City, and other our Subjects that had been most eminent for their Loyalty.

But it pleased almighty God, by his wonderful Providence, to defeat these Counsels, by the sudden Fire at Newmarket, which necessitated our Return from thence before the Time we had appointed.

Yet these Villains were not thereby discouraged from pursuing the same bloody Design, but resolved to take the first Opportunity for effecting the same, and proposed to themselves, that it might be done either in our Passage from Windsor to Hampton-court, or in our Journey to Winchester, or when we should go by Water in our Barge, or under Bedford Garden-wall, as we should pass that way, or at the Bull Feast, which was to be in Red-hyon-fields, they being informed, that we and our dearest Brother had Intentions of coming thither.

And that they might be the better prepared, when there should be Occasion, by having a certain Number of Arms lying always ready for that purpose, Arms for Forty Men were bespoke in all Haste, viz. Thirty Carbines with Belts and Swivles, Thirty Cases of Pistols, and Ten Blunderbushes, which were accordingly made and paid for.

And for the more easy drawing their Party together, against the Time of Execution, they contrived to divide our Cities of London and Westminster, and the Suburbs, into Twenty Parts, from each of which they expected Five hundred Men to be ready at the first Onset; and some Agitators were to give an Account of the Men to be furnished in each Division, and to give out Orders to them as there should be Occasion.

And to the end the Forces they should raise might be the sooner modelled into the Form of an Army, there were One hundred old Officers, who had been engaged in the late Rebellion, ready in Town to take the Command of them: In the pursuit of which Project, they continued till they knew that a Discovery had been made unto us.

During all this Time, the principal Conspirators were managing their other Design for a general Insurrection in both Kingdoms.

The late Earl of Shaftsbury, who had at first pressed them to sudden Rising, which he would have had before the 17 of November last, or upon that Day at the farthest, sent to the Conspirators, at a Meeting appointed by them, to know their Resolution; and finding they would not adventure without farther Preparation, conveyed himself secretly into Holland, to avoid the Danger he might be in by a Discovery.

His withdrawing himself from their Counsels, did not discourage them from pursuing their Design, only made them more cautious; whereupon a new Council was appointed of Six Persons, that were to have the chief Management of Affairs, in order to a general Insurrection, by a Correspondency with their Party in Scotland, and several Counties of this our Kingdom: And because a Correspondency by Letters was thought dangerous, it was held necessary that some Person should be sent into Scotland, to invite the Heads of the disaffected Party in that our Kingdom, to come hither, under pretence of purchasing Lands in Carolina, but, in Truth, to concert with them the best Means for carrying on the Design jointly in both Kingdoms; and a Treaty was thereupon had with Archibaid Campbel late Earl of Argyle, already attainted of Treason, who demanded Thirty thousand Pounds at first, but afterward agreed to accept of Ten thousand Pounds, for buying of Arms in Holland, and making other Provisions necessary for a Rebellion, within our Kingdom of Scotland.

In the said Council of Six, it was debated, whether the Rising in this Kingdom should be first in our City of London, where, by reason of the vast Numbers that might readily unite, they thought they might easily master the Guards, or rather in some remote Parts, whereby we should be under a Necessity of sending our Guards to suppress them, and thereby the Rising in our said City, would become more secure and effectual: But at last it was resolved, as most convenient, that it should be in all Parts at the same Time, lest our City might be defended by the Militia thereof, without the Help of our Guards, which we might send for the suppressing any Insurrection in the Country; and they did all dispose themselves accordingly, for the compassing their Design, which was very near taking Effect.

But such was the abundant Mercy of almighty God, while they were yet meditating their execrable Mischiefs against our Royal Person, our dearest Brother, and the Government, a Discovery was made unto us by one of the Accomplices, on the Twelfth of June last, since which Time we have used the best Means we could, for the detecting and Prevention of so hellish a Conspiracy.

But so it has happened, that divers of the Conspirators, having Notice of Warrants issued out for their Apprehension, are fled from Justice, viz. James Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Melvil, Sir John Cochran, Sir Thomas Armstrong, Robert Fergusson, who was the common Agitator entrusted by all Parties in the several Conspiracies, Richard Goodenough, Francis Goodenough, Richard Rumbold the Maltster, William Rumbold his Brother, Richard N-lthorp, Nathanael Wade, William Thomson, James Burton, Joseph Elby, Samuel Gibbs, Francis Charleton, Joseph Tyley, Carstairs, Lobb, both nonconformist Preachers, Edward Norton, John Rew, John Aylief, and John Atherton.

Ford Lord Gray being apprehended, made his Escape out of the Hands of a Serjeant at Arms, and Arthur late Earl of Essex, being committed to the Tower for high Treason, killed himself.

Others have been taken and committed to Custody, some of whom, viz. the Lord William Russel, Thomas Walcott, William Hone, and John Rouse, have, upon their Trials, been convicted, attainted, and executed according to Law.

This we thought fit to make known to our loving Subjects, that they being sensible (as we are) of the Mercy of God, in this great Deliverance, may cheerfully and devoutly joyn with us, in returning solemn Thanks to almighty God for the same.

For which end, we do hereby appoint the Ninth Day of September next, to be observed as a Day of Thanksgiving, in all Churches and Chapels within this our Kingdom of England, Dominion of Wales, and Town of Berwick upon Tweed, in such Manner as shall be by us directed, in a Form of Prayer with Thanksgiving, which we have commanded to be prepared by our Bishops, and published for that purpose.

And it is our Pleasure, that this Declaration be publickly read in all the said Churches and Chapels, as well on Sunday the second of September next, as upon the Day of Thanksgiving aforesaid.

Given at our Court at Whitehall, the eight and twentieth Day of July, 1683. in the five and thirtieth Year of our Reign.

CHARLES, by the Grace of GOD, King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith: To Our Lyon King at Arms, and his Brethren, Herald, Macers, Pursuivants, and Messengers at Arms, Our Sheriffs in that Part, conjunctly and severally, specially constitute, Greeting: To all and sundry Our good Subjects, Greeting: Forasmuch as almighty God, in his great Mercy, and by his wonderful Providence, hath brought to Light, defeated and confounded a most unnatural, traiterous, and diabolical Conspiracy, contrived and carried on by Persons of fanatical, atheistical, and republican Principles, for taking away our sacred Life, and the Life of our dearest Brother James Duke of Albany, subverting of Our Government, and involving these Kingdoms in Blood, Confusion and Miseries; concerning which unreasonable Conspiracy, We have emitted Our Royal Declaration, to all Our loving Subjects, at Our Court at Whitehall, the 28 of July last, in this 35 Year of Our Reign, which We have ordered to be reprinted here: And We being deeply sensible of the humble and grateful Praises and Adoration We owe to the divine Majesty, for this great and signal Instance of his watchful Care over Us, whom he hath so long preserved, and so often delivered by Miracles, have, out of Our religious Disposition, readily approvedly observed throughout this whole Kingdom, to offer up devout Praises and Thanksgiving, to be religiously observed throughout this whole Kingdom, to offer up devout Praises and Thanksgiving to almighty God, for this eminent and miraculous Deliverance granted to Us, and in Us, to all Our loyal and dutiful Subjects; as also, fervently to pray, that God may continue his gracious Care over Us, and his Mercies to these Kingdoms, and more and more bring to Light, defeat and confound all traiterous Conspiracies, Assocations, and Machinations against Us, Our dearest Brother, and Government, We, with Advice of Our Privy Council, have therefore thought fit, by this Our Royal Proclamation, to indict a general and solemn Thanksgiving, to be observed throughout this Kingdom, that all Our loving Subjects may offer their devout Praises and Gratulations, and their fervent Prayers and Supplications, to almighty God, for the Purposes foresaid: And We strictly command and charge, that the said solemn Thanksgiving be religiously and devoutly performed by all Our Subjects and People within this Our Kingdom, upon the Ninth of September next. And to the end this Part of divine Worship, so pious and necessary, may be uniformly and at the same Time offered by all Our loving and loyal Subjects, We hereby require the Reverend Archbishops and Bishops, to give Notice hereof to the Ministers in their respective Dioceses, that upon the Lord's Day immediately preceeding the said Ninth Day of September next, as also upon the said Ninth of September, they cause read and intimate this Our Royal Proclamation, from the Pulpit, in every Parish Church, together with Our foresaid Declaration, dated at Our Court at Whitehall, as said is, and that they exhort all Our Subjects to a serious and devout Performance of the said Prayers, Praises, and Thanksgiving, as they tender the Favour of almighty God; and the Safety and Preservation of Our sacred Life and Government; certifying all such as shall contemn or neglect this so religious and important a Duty, they shall be proceeded against, and punished as Contemnors of Our Authority, and as Persons highly disaffected to Our Person and Government: And ordain these Presents to be printed.

Given under Our Signet, at Holy-rood-house the seventh Day of August, One thousand six hundred and eighty three, and of Our Reign the Thirty fifth Year.

God save the King.

Decree of the University of Oxford, July 21. 1683. N<sup>o</sup>. XCI.

Altho' the barbarous Assassination, lately enterprized against the Person of his sacred Majesty, and his Royal Brother, engage all Our Thoughts to reflect with utmost Detestation and Abhorrence of that execrable Villany, hateful to God and Man, and pay our due Acknowledgments to the Divine Providence, which, by extraordinary Methods, brought it to pass, that the Breath of our Nostrils, the Anointed of the Lord is not taken in the Pit which was prepared for him; and that, under his Shadow, we continue to live and enjoy the Blessings of his Government: Yet notwithstanding, we find it to be a necessary Duty, at this Time, to search into, and lay open these impious Doctrines, which, having of late been studiously disseminated, gave Rise and Growth to those nefarious Attempts, and pass upon them our solemn publick Censure and Decree of Condemnation.

Therefore, to the Honour of the holy and undivided Trinity, the Preservation of catholick Truth in the Church, and that the King's Majesty may be secured from the Attempts of open and bloody Enemies, and the Machinations of traiterous Hereticks and Schismatics, we, the Vice-chancellor, Doctors, Proctors, and Masters regent and not regent, met in Convocation in the accustomed Manner, Time and Place, on Saturday the 21 of July, in the Year 1683. concerning certain Propositions contained in divers Books and Writings, published in English, and also in the Latin Tongue, repugnant to the holy Scriptures, Decrees of Councils, Writings of the Fathers, the Faith and Profession of the primitive Church, and also destructive of the kingly Government, the Safety of his Majesty's Person, the publick Peace, the Laws of Nature, and Bonds of human Society, by our unanimous Assent and Consent have decreed and determined in Manner and Form following.

Propositions.

1. All civil Authority is derived originally from the People.
2. There is a mutual Compact, tacite or exprefs, between a Prince and his Subjects; and that if he perform not his Duty, they are discharged from theirs.
3. That if lawful Governors become Tyrants, or govern otherwise than, by the Laws of God and Man, they ought to do, they forfeit the Right they had unto their Government.
Lex Rex, Buchanan de jure regni, Vindicta contra tyrannos, Bellarmine de conciliis, de pontifice, Milton, Goodwin, Baxter, H. C.
4. The Sovereignty of England is in the Three Estates, viz. King, Lords and Commons; the King has but a co-ordinate Power, and may be over-ruled by the other Two.
Lex Rex, Hutton of a limited and mixed Monarchy, Baxter, H. C. Polit. Catech.
5. Birthright or Proximity of Blood give no Title to Rule or Government, and it is lawful to preclude the next Heir from his Right of Succession to the Crown.
Lex Rex, Hunt's Postscript, Doleman, History of Succession, Julian the Apostate, Mene Tekel.
6. It is lawful for Subjects, without the Consent, and against the Command of the supreme Magistrate, to enter into Leagues, Covenants and Associations, for Defence of themselves and their Religion.
Solemn League and Covenant, Late Association.
7. Self-preservation is the fundamental Law of Nature, and supercedes the Obligation of all others, whenever they stand in Competition with it.
Hobbes de cive, Leviathan.
8. The Doctrine of the Gospel concerning patient suffering of Injuries, is not inconsistent with violent resisting of the higher Powers, in case of Persecution for Religion.
Lex Rex, Julian Apostate, Apolog. re'at.
9. There lies no Obligation upon Christians to passive Obedience, when the Prince commands any Thing against the Laws of our Country; and the primitive Christians chose rather to die than resist, because Christianity was not yet settled by the Laws of the Empire.
Julian Apostate.
10. Possession and Strength give a Right to govern, and Success in a Cause or Enterprize, preclaims it to be lawful and just; to pursue it is to comply with the Will of God, because it is to follow the Conduct of his Providence.
Hobbes, Owen's Sermon before the Regicides, Jan. 31. 1648. Baxter, Jenkin's Petition, Oct. 1651.
11. In the State of Nature there is no Difference between Good and Evil, Right and Wrong: The State of Nature is a State of War, in which every Man hath a Right to all Things.
12. The Foundation of civil Authority is this natural Right, which is not given, but left to the supreme Magistrate upon Mens entering into Societies, and not only a foreign Invader, but a domestick Rebel puts himself again into a State of Nature, to be proceeded against not as a Subject, but an Enemy, and consequently acquires, by his Rebellion, the same Right over the Life of his Prince, as the Prince, for the most heinous Crimes, has over the Life of his own Subjects.
13. Every Man, after his entering into a Society, retains a Right of defending himself against Force, and cannot transfer that Right to the Common-wealth, when he consents to that Union whereby a Common-wealth is made; and in case a great many Men together have already resisted the Common-wealth, for which every one of them expecteth Death, they have Liberty then to joyn together to assist and defend one another. Their bearing of Arms subsequent to the first Breach of their Duty, tho' it be to maintain what they have done, is no new unjust Act, and if it be only to defend their Persons, is not unjust at all.
14. An Oath superadds no Obligation to Paſt, and a Paſt obliges no further than it is credited; and consequently, if a Prince gives any Indication, that he does not believe the Promises of Fealty and Allegiance made by any of his Subjects, they are thereby freed from their Subjection, and, notwithstanding their Paſts and Oaths, may lawfully rebel against, and destroy their Sovereign.
15. If a People that, by Oath and Duty, are obliged to a Sovereign, shall sinfully dispossess him, and contrary to their Covenants, choose and covenant with another, they may be obliged by their later Covenant notwithstanding their former.
Baxter, H. C.
16. All Oaths are unlawful, and contrary to the Word of God.
Quakers.
17. An Oath obliges not in the Sense of the Imposer, but the Takers.
Sheriff's Case.
18. Dominion is founded in Grace.
19. The Powers of this World are Usurpations upon the Prerogative of Jesus Christ, and it is the Duty of God's People to destroy them, in order to the setting Christ upon his Throne.
Fifth-monarchy Men.
20. The Presbyterian Government is the Sceptre of Christ's Kingdom, to which Kings, as well as others, are bound to submit; and the King's Supremacy in ecclesiastical Affairs, asserted by the Church of England, is injurious to Christ the sole King and Head of his Church.
Altare Damascenum, Apolog. relat. Hist. indulgen. Cartwright, Travers.
21. It is not lawful for Superiors to impose any Thing, in the Worship of God, that is not antecedently necessary.
22. The Duty of not offending a weak Brother, is inconsistent with all human Authority of making Laws concerning indifferent Things.
Protestant Reconciler.
23. Wicked

23. Wicked Kings and Tyrants ought to be put to Death, and if the Judges and inferior Magistrates will not do their Office, the Power of the Sword devolves to the People; if the major Part of the People refuse to exercise this Power, then the Ministers may excommunicate such a King, after which it is lawful for any of the Subjects to kill him, as the People did Athaliah, and Jehu Jezebel.
Buchanan, Knox, Goodman, Gilby, Jesuits.

24. After the sealing of the Scripture Canon, the People of God, in all Ages, are to expect new Revelations for a Rule of their Actions; and it is lawful for a private Man, having an inward Motion from God, to kill a Tyrant<sup>b</sup>.

25. The Example of Phinehas is to us instead of a Command; for what God has commanded or approved in one Age, must needs oblige in all.

Goodman, Knox, Nephtali.

26. King Charles I. was lawfully put to Death, and his Murderers were the blessed Instruments of God's Glory in their Generation.

27. King Charles I. made War upon his Parliament; and in such a Case the King may not only be resisted, but he ceaseth to be King.

Baxter.

We decree, judge, and declare all and every of those Propositions to be false, seditious and impious, and most of them to be also heretical and blasphemous, infamous to Christian Religion, and destructive of all Government in Church and State.

We further decree, that the Books which contain the foresaid Propositions, and impious Doctrines, are fitted to deprave good Manners, corrupt the Minds of unwary Men, stir up Seditions and Tumults, overthrow States and Kingdoms, and lead to Rebellion, Murder of Princes, and Atheism it self; and therefore we interdict all Members of the University from reading the said Books, under the Penalties in the Statutes express.

We also order the before recited Books to be publicly burnt, by the Hand of our Marshal, in the Court of our Schools.

Likewise we order, that in perpetual Memory hereof, these our Decrees shall be entred into the Registry of our Convocation, and that Copies of them being communicated to the several Colleges and Halls within this University, they be there publicly affixed in the Libraries, Refectories, or other fit Places, where they may be seen, and read of all.

Lastly. We command, and strictly enjoyn all and singular Readers, Tutors, Catechists, and others to whom the Care and Trust of Institution of Youth is committed, that they diligently instruct and ground their Scholars in that most necessary Doctrine, which, in a Manner, is the Badge and Character of the Church of England, of submitting to every Ordinance of Man for the Lord's sake, whether it be unto the King as Supreme, or unto Governors as unto them that are sent by him for the Punishment of evil Doers, and for the Praise of them that do well; teaching that this Submission and Obedience is to be clear, absolute, and without Exception of any State or Order of Men; also, that all Supplications, Prayers, Intercessions, and giving of Thanks be made for all Men, for the King, and all that are in Authority, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable Life in all Godliness and Honesty, for this is good and acceptable in the Sight of God our Saviour; and, in especial Manner, that they press and oblige them, humbly to offer their most ardent and daily Prayers at the Throne of Grace, for the Preservation of our sovereign Lord King Charles, from the Attempts of open Violence, and secret Machinations of perfidious Traitors, that he, the Defender of the Faith, being safe under the Defence of the most High, may continue his Reign on Earth, till he exchange it for that of a late and happy Immortality.

To the King.

Sir,

YOur most humble Subjects of the Protestant Religion, not having Power to resist the Motions of their Consciences, are constrained to assemble together, to call upon the holy Name of God, and sing his Praises; and by this religious Acting, to expose themselves to all the Violences and Rigour, which a too fierce Zeal can infuse into the Breasts of your Officers. And because God hath established your Majesty for their Monarch, they are obliged to justify their Proceedings and Behaviour before your Majesty, with all the Humility they are capable of.

These Assemblies, Sir, do no way hurt or wound that Fidelity which your Petitioners ow your Majesty; they are all accorded to sacrifice their Fortunes and their Lives for your Service. The very same Religion which constrains them to assemble together to celebrate the Glory of God, teaches them that they can never dispense, under any Pretence whatever, with that Allegiance which is due to your Majesty; Nor has your Majesty any Need to publish your Declarations to enforce them to embrace a Maxim so certain, and so well grounded upon Christianity. It remains then, Sir, that your Petitioners insist upon nothing, but what is only due to God; for as to what concerns your Majesty, their past Behaviour gives Testimony of the Reality and Purity of their Intentions, and may serve as a Security to your Majesty for the future; and in a Word, your Petitioners are all ready with their Blood to sign the Oath of their Allegiance. As to what concerns their Duty towards God, your Majesty hath so much Piety to take it not amiss, that they render to that great God that Worship and Adoration which they owe him. They also presume to hope, that your Majesty will have the Goodness to reflect upon their Behaviour, that you will compassionate the Desolations to which their Piety exposes them; and that perhaps you will extend your Indignation against those who have by Surprise obtained so many severe Decrees and Declarations against them, and yet would further provoke your Wrath against Subjects so faithful, and so innocent.

Your Supplicants, Sir, are persuaded that God has not sent them into this World, but to glorify him, and they will rather choose to lose their Lives a thousand times, than fail of their Duty so holy and indispensable.

It is in your Majesty's Power to deprive them of all the Advantages of this World, and also to doom to utter Destruction. They are ready for to sacrifice all, to suffer all Miseries at your Majesty's Pleasure: But it may be, when your Majesty shall consider, that your Petitioners do not give way to the most faithful of all your Subjects (which all the World confesses) in their Duties to God, your Majesty will not do that Injury to his Glory and to his Goodness, as to destroy a People, for no other Reason meriting your Indignation.

The Miseries of your Petitioners, Sir, only arise from the Reverence they have for the Divinity, whole Word they look upon as the only Rule of their religious Worship.

Were the Dispute alone concerning our opposing Men for the Service of your Majesty, though all the World should rebel against your Majesty's Will, though all your other Subjects should fail of their Fidelity and Obedience, your Petitioners would inviolably stand by their august Monarch, and with Pleasure spend the last Drop of Blood in his Service.

But their Unhappiness is so great, that the Declarations put forth against them, to the Prejudice of so many Edicts and Decrees made by your Majesty, and the Kings your Predecessors, appear to them incompatible with the Commands of the great Creator of Heaven and Earth.

For God hath ordained them to instruct their Children and their Families, and to declare unto them the Word of Life. He also pronounces his dreadful Anathema's against them who shut the Gates of Heaven against those to whom he freely opens them. He commands them to offer to him Hymns and spiritual Songs. Nevertheless, Sir, those Declarations that have been surreptitiously obtained against us, forbid us to sing the Psalms of David, which do contain the Praises of God.

In short, Sir, it is the Pleasure of God that we should assemble together in his Name, to render him the solemn Adoration and Honour which is due to him. Nevertheless, Sir, those Declarations which your Petitioners Enemies have obtained against us by repeated Surprises, forbid them to assemble together, to render to that great God the Service which is due to him.

During this Inability of your Petitioners, to reconcile the Will of God to what is exacted from them, they find themselves constrained by their Consciences, to expose themselves to all sorts of Calamities, for the Continuance of giving Glory to the Majesty of God, who will be served according to his Word.

If the Doctrine of your Petitioners were abominable, if their Worship were scandalous, if they preferred the Creature in the Place of the Creator, there might be some Reason to solicit your Majesty to refuse their Protection: But all their Crime, and all the Difference between theirs and the Catholick Religion, consists in this.

That they prefer the Word of God before the Traditions of Men, and the true Worship of that great God, (who protests to be jealous of his Honour, and that he will not yield it to any other) before the religious Worship of the Creature.

All Religion, Sir, to speak properly, consists only in Belief, in Prayers, and in Works: And your Petitioners believe, and hold the Creed of the holy Apostles, and the Lords Prayer, to be the Model of those which they present to God; and the Commandments of that God are the Rule and Guidance of their Conduct and Conversation. They know, and have no need, according to St. Paul, of knowing any other but only Jesus Christ, and him crucified. They acknowledge God for the only true God, and for him who sent Jesus Christ; for on this Belief it is that our Lord hath founded Life eternal.

Their Enemies make strange Interpretations of their Opinions, and their Worship. However, Sir, your Petitioners implore the Mercy of God. They trust in the incomprehensible Charity, and infinite Merits of their adorable Saviour, whom they do embrace with a constant and lively Faith. They have Recourse, with all Humility, to the healthful Succour and Grace of his holy Spirit; and to this Trinity it is, that they render their Adoration and Homage, invoking it after the same Form that the Scripture hath prescribed in his Word. They meditate upon his Wonders. They sing his Praises: And they make it their continual Study to live holily among themselves, justly toward their Neighbour, obediently toward your Majesty, and religiously toward God.

They therefore supplicate your Majesty to be the Judge, whether your Petitioners are unworthy of your paternal Goodness, and the Honour of your Protection; whether they merit to be thrown into that Extremity of Destruction wherein they are at present overwhelm'd, sufficient enough to move the Gones of the most insensible. And lastly, Sir, whether it be possible that they should live without continuing to assemble together, to render to God the Service which they owe him.

After all this, your Petitioners cannot but pray to the great God, who advances your Throne above all the Thrones of the Earth, to incline your Majesty's Heart toward your Subjects, whose Innocency and Allegiance is apparent to the Eyes of the whole World. And if these your poor People shall not yet be able to move the Compassion of their august Monarch, for whom they shall always retain a sincere Love, and awful Reverence, a singular Veneration, and inviolable Fidelity, they do protest before the Face of that great God for whose sake they are exposed to so much Misery, that they will render him Honour and Glory in the midst of their most terrible Calamities.

But, Sir, your Petitioners hope much better Things from the natural Equity, Goodness, and Piety of your Majesty; for which Reason, they prostrate themselves at your royal Feet, and most humbly implore your Majesty:

To recal all the Declarations, Decrees, and other Judgments, which have reduc'd them to that deplorable Condition wherein they are, and deprive them not of the Liberty of their Consciences and Exercise of their their Religion, by virtue of so many solemn Edicts, confirmed by so many Declarations granted them by your Majesty, without which it is impossible for them to live.

[ And your Petitioners shall continue to pray for the Preservation of your Majesty's sacred Person, your royal Family, and the Honour and Prosperity of your Kingdom. ]

Another Petition presented by Marischal Schomberg for the French Protestants.
N<sup>o</sup>. XCIII.

WE your Subjects of that Religion ( which we call the Reformed ) do, with most profound Reverence, cast our selves at the Feet of your Majesty, that so we may represent the many Aggrievances which have been heaped upon us, one after another, and may most humbly beg some effectual Relentment of the same, from your Justice and Goodness.

The Edicts of the Kings your Predecessors, and particularly those of Henry the Great and Lewis the Just, which your Majesty most authentically confirmed at your happy Inauguration, and since by divers and sundry Declarations, have always had Regard to those of the said Religion, which consists of a considerable Part of those People which God hath committed to your Charge; and as such, they have not only been permitted to exercise their Employments, and Arts, and Trades, whereby they gain their Livelyhood, but also have been promoted to Places of Trust and Honour, as Effects of their Merit and Virtue: They have also enjoyed a Liberty of Conscience, by a free Exercise of their Religion and Discipline in all Places privileged by the aforesaid Edicts, and Commissioners also have been appointed to take Care, that there should be no Infringements or Violations thereof.

There have been also Courts of Justice consisting of Men of both Religions, that at all Times the Protestants might be assured of impartial Justice, both as to their Persons, and Estate. And the Gentlemen particularly had Right, to place in their Fie-farms those of one or the other Religion, without any Difference: In short, your Petitioners enjoyed almost the same Freedom and Advantages, as the other Subjects of your Majesty.

It is true, Sir, that these were the Concessions of the Kings your Predecessors, and of your present Majesty, and have been established with such Circumstances, as the Edicts themselves call a perpetual and an irrevocable Law, designed purposely to keep your Subjects both of one and the other Religion in perfect Amity. And your Petitioners can confidently aver, that they have so demeaned themselves under this Law, and Privileges, as never to have rendred themselves unworthy thereof: But on the contrary have gained this Advantage, that your Majesty hath made many solemn and gracious Declarations, testifying the entire Satisfaction your Majesty hath conceived of the Zeal and Loyalty of your Petitioners, in Times of most Hazard and Difficulty. And now, Sir, we need not search the Histories of many Years to demonstrate the Difference of our present Condition, from those Times; for it is now but a few Years since your Petitioners have not only been made incapable of being admitted into publick Offices, but discharged of those in which they were invested, and in which they had always served with Honour and Fidelity.

For, contrary to the true Intent and Words of this Edict, they have taken from your Petitioners the Privilege of equally entring with others into the Commission of Consulates, and the municipal Offices of Towns, even in those very Corporations, wherein your Petitioners are the greatest in the Administration of the civil Government, and Management of that Money which is levied upon them.

They have not now in many Places any Admittance to the meanest Office in the Publick, nor are they licensed to exercise those Arts and Trades whereby they gain their sole Livelyhood and Subsistence.

They can reckon up at least 300 Protestant Churches, which in the Space of ten Years have been demolished, notwithstanding that some of them have been expressly named in the Edict of Nantz, and others comprehended within the Limits and Sense thereof.

The Commissioners which are always ready to receive Process against your Petitioners, yet stop their Ears to their Complaints; and if they do take Notice of them, it is with a corrupt and partial Sentence, and oftentimes the Catholick Commissioners pronounce Judgment against your Petitioners, without the Intervention and Assent of those of their Religion.

Those who have changed from the Protestant to the Catholick Religion, not finding that Quietness of Conscience which they expected therein, so that they have returned again to their first Perswasion, have been exposed to most rigorous Penances, under the Term of Relapse, and the Ministers and Consistories have been liable to be suppressed.

If any of the Catholick Religion become Protestants, they presently persecute those to whom they applied themselves for clearing their Doubts or declaring their Belief, pretending that thereby they come within the Compass of that Crime, which is called Subornation.

The Chambers of this Edict are not only incorporated with the Parliaments, against the express Sense of the Edict, but are extinguished wholly, and suppressed.

The Children of your Petitioners, though born in their Religion, are often taken from them, before they have attained to that Age which the Edicts allow them, before they are obliged to declare the Religion which they resolve to profess: And if hereupon they address themselves to your Commissioners, advising them to put in Execution the Edict, they either refuse to take Cognizance thereof, or else elude it in that Manner, that for several Years together they take not the least Notice of their Complaints, nor have the ordinary Judges any Regard thereunto.

They will not suffer the Protestants to entertain more than one Schoolmaster in the Town where they live; and though the Children amount to 2 or 3000 in Number, yet they will not allow more than one Master for them all.

Your Petitioners have been much surprized, by a Declaration issued out for changing the Form and Tenor of their Synods, by placing certain catholick Commissioners for Assistants therein; which being entirely contrary to the Meaning and Substance of those Edicts, and Declaration of Lewis XIII. set out in the Year 1623. and to the Custom always observed, hath no other Foundation than those Pretences which reflect on the Honour of your Petitioners, and that Fidelity which they have ever professed towards the Service of your Majesty.

The Bishops, under colour of their Visitations, and by virtue of an Order of Arrest from your Privy Council, have pretended to suspend the Exercise of the Religion of your Petitioners for several Weeks.

The Clergy which have entred the Protestant Churches, to hear the Sermons which are there preached, do object unto the Ministers Matters which they never uttered, or take Advantage of certain Terms which cannot be avoided in Controversie, to form a criminal Process against them before a Judge, who is prepossessed with a Prejudice against them; and in the mean time the Clergy do not cease to justify themselves against the Petitioners, by such Courses as are expressly forbidden by the aforesaid Edicts.

The chief Justices of several Places, to whom Matters relating to the Edicts did never appertain, do now undertake by unknown Methods of Procedure, to interdict or suspend the Ministers of whole Provinces.

In fine, so far are they proceeded, as to make a Declaration, forbidding Protestant Women to make Use of other Chirurgeons, or Midwives, than those which are Catholicks, that so their Children may be dipped in Water by them in case of Necessity: Which as it is directly opposite to the Sense of the Edicts, so it is also to the Principles of that Religion which your Petitioners profess; for their Consciences will never allow them to consent hereunto, because that as on one side, they cannot believe that Baptism is of an absolute and indispensable Necessity, where Death prevents the due Care and Cautions we use to obtain it; so on the other side, your Petitioners have that just Reverence to so great a Sacrament, as not to commit the same to the Administration of Lay Persons, nor believe that such dipping or sprinkling with Water, can ever supply the Place of Baptism.

These Proceedings, Sir, and many more of them very considerable, are more easily mentioned in general, than to be troublesome to your Majesty in a Recital of the Particulars, which are either notoriously known to the World, or to be justified and made good by Attestations which your Petitioners have in their Hands, together with Judgments, Arrests and Declarations. All the World, which observes the low Condition unto which your Petitioners are reduced, begin to consider them, as Persons exposed to the Malice and Persecution of those who desire their total Destruction.

Nothing more can be added to the general Consternation of those who profess the Protestant Religion in all Parts of our Kingdom; so that many for Fear, or for Necessity, have been forced to abandon their Dwellings, and seek their Repose in the Dominions of Strangers: Such as remain here, are detained by the Love they bear to their Native Country, or by some Difficulty they find in the Disposal of their Estates; though the greatest Number are obliged with an Affection to your Majesty and your Government. In all these Aggrievances, Sir, your Petitioners have no other Defence and Protection, under God, than the Justice and Clemency of your Majesty, by which they have formerly had Access to your sacred Person, which hath ever lent a gentle Ear to the just Complaints of your Petitioners, having nominated Commissioners of your Council particularly to examine their Cause, and make Report thereof to your Majesty: But the great Wars which your Majesty hath lately maintained, have diverted this Care to greater Thoughts, whereby the Evils and Oppressions of your Petitioners have been multiplied and increased.

And now, Sir, since your Majesty enjoys the Triumph of those glorious Successes with which God hath favoured your Designs, and that your People expect likewise to share some Part of the Fruit of their Labours; your Petitioners hope, through the Justice and gracious Goodness of your Majesty, that no Distinction shall be made between your Petitioners and your other Subjects, lest whilst some are in Joy, and at Rest, the others should mourn, and groan under Oppressions.

For which Reasons, Sir, and because your Petitioners have ever entertained the same Zeal and Fidelity to your Service; may it please your Majesty to make known unto the Lords of your Council, Presidents, and Attorney-generals of Parliaments, to Superintendents and Commissioners executing the Law, that your royal Will and Pleasure is, that the Edicts be observed and executed; and particularly to encharge such Commissioners as are already named by your Majesty, or shall be hereafter named, that they examine the Memorials and Papers of Justification, which your Petitioners shall produce, and to inform your Majesty thereof; and especially to the Secretaries of State, that a due Report may be made thereof, and of those Aggrievances and Burdens which are most oppressing, that so your Majesty being truly made sensible thereof, may act therein according to your gracious Pleasure. And your Petitioners shall continue their Vows, and Prayers for the Glory of your Majesty, and for the Prosperity of your sacred Person and Kingdom.

CHARLES, by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith:
To Our Lovits, of Our Privy Council, and Messengers at Arms, Our Sheriffs in that Part, conjunctly and severally, specially constitute, Greeting. Forasmuch as We, considering the frequent Rebellions that have been lately raised by by rebellious and unnatural Subjects, within this Our ancient Kingdom, contrary to their native Allegiance, to the Destruction of Our Government, and the Peace and Quiet of all Our good People, and the extravagant and impious Principles, which have been the necessary and fatal Consequences thereupon ensuing, We did, amongst other Remedies, ordain these who were in Arms; and these who had reset them, to be legally cited before Our Justices, to the effect they might be tried: And notwithstanding that all fair and legal Opportunities of defending their own Innocence had been offered them; yet many of them being now denounced Rebels and Fugitives from Our Laws, We are resolved to prosecute them, till they be brought to condign Punishment; and therefore We have appointed an exact Roll of the said Persons, so denounced, to be printed, requiring all Our Subjects, not only not to comfort, or harbour the said Persons, but likewise to do their utmost Endeavours to apprehend them, as far as in their Power, and to give notice to Our next Sheriffs, Bailies of Bailiaries and Regalities, Stewarts of Stewartries, Magistrates of Burrows, and other Officers and Ministers of Our Law, and to the Officers of Our Army, when they know that any of them lurk in their Bounds: As also, in case there be any contained in the said Rolls and List, that have been denounced through their Negligence or Ignorance, altho' they have subscribed the Bond, or taken the Test, as was prescribed by Our former Proclamations, therefore We, with Advice of Our Privy Council, yet allow any of the said Persons who shall, betwixt and the first of August next ensuing, clear to Our Justices, that they have taken the Bond or Test in due Time, to be thereupon relaxed gratis, before Our Justices; and Our Justices are hereby allowed to desert the Diet against them, they comparing, and being relaxed, as said is. And to the end it may be better cleared who have taken the said Bond and Test, all Persons, who were commissionerate to administrate the same, are hereby required and commanded to send in, to the Clerks of Our Privy Council, the Bond and Test so taken before them, betwixt and the said first Day of August next, certifying them, if they fail, Letters of Horning shall be direct against them, under the Signet of Our Privy Council, to that effect, upon a Charge of Six Days, under the Pain of Rebellion, &c. And to the effect Our Pleasure in the Premises may be made known, Our Will is, and We charge you straitly, and command, that incontinent, these Our Letters seen, ye pass to the Market-cross of Edinburgh, and remanent Market-crosses of the head Burghs of the Shires of this Kingdom, and other Places needful, and there, by open Proclamation, make Publication of the Premises, that all Persons concerned may have notice thereof.

Given under Our Signet, at Edinburgh the Fifth Day of May, One thousand six hundred eighty and four Years, and of Our Reign the Thirtieth and sixth Year.

CHARLES, by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith: To Our Lyon King at Arms, his Brethren, Heralds, Mace-bearers of Our Privy Council, Purse-bearers, Messengers at Arms, Our Sheriffs in that Part, conjunctly and severally, specially constitute, Greeting. Forasmuch as, by the Nature of the Monarchy devolved upon us by God Almighty alone, and by the inherent Privilege and Prerogative of the imperial Crown of this Our ancient Kingdom, We are sufficiently impowered to take such Courses and Methods, as, according to the Circumstances of the Times wherein We are stated, may best secure Our Royal Government, and Our innocent and peaceable Subjects: As also by the Laws and Acts of Parliament of this Our Kingdom, all Sheriffs, Stewards, Lords, and Bailies of Regalities and Bailiaries, and their Deputies are obliged, when any rebellious and disorderly People appear openly in any of their Jurisdictions, to con-vocate Our Lieges, and to raise the Hue and Cry against them, and never leave the following and pursuing of them, till they be chased out of the said Jurisdictions, and to take and apprehend them, and bring them in, and present them to Justice; and that the Heritors, Commons, and generally all Our Lieges, are bound to concur with them. In which, if they fail, as in that which is their Duty, We must take such other Courses as may most effectually secure Our Royal Government, and good Subjects. Yet it is undeniable, that, for many Years, great Numbers of armed Rebels have most insolently and rebelliously gathered them-selves together, and have not only marched up and down Our western Shires of Cheshire, and other Shires, besouth the River of Forth, but have assaulted and murdered severals belonging to Our Forces, burnt Our Laws, and excommunicated Our sacred Person; and of late, in the Month of June last, about Two hun-dred armed Rebels have presumed, to the great Contempt of Our Authority, to march openly through se-veral of the said Shires for many Days together, threatening the orthodox Clergy, and murdering Our Sol-diers, and have, at last (when they found it convenient) disappeared, being certainly and undeniably harboured, and refert by the Inhabitants of those Shires, without sufficient Diligence done by the Sheriffs, and Inhabitants of the said Shires, either for dissipating them, or for discovering their Referters, and bringing them to Justice; by which Preparative (if allowed) all Rebels may safely rise in Arms, and yet be secure. We therefore, with Advice of Our Privy Council, do hereby command and charge Our Sheriffs, Stewards, and others in the several Shires foresaid, as they will be answerable upon their Duty, and highest Peril (with whom We command the Heritors and Commons to concur) to apprehend, and bring in to Ju-stice the Persons of the said Rebels, who appeared openly in the said Shires, and to discover to Us, and Our Privy Council, betwixt and the Fifteenth Day of August next, all such as did refert and in-tercommune with them; with Certification, that, if they fail, We will, for preserving the publick Peace, and Our good Subjects, take such other effectual Courses, as, in Our Royal Prudence, We shall find most fit for preventing Rebellions, and securing the publick Peace in the Shires abovementioned. And to the ef-fect Our Pleasure in the Premises may be known to all Our Lieges, Our Will is herefore, and We charge you strictly, and command, that incontinent, these Our Letters seen, ye pass to the Market-crosses of Ean-burgh, and whole remanent Market-crosses of the head Burghs of the Shires of this Kingdom, on this Side of the Water of Forth, and there, in Our Name and Authority, by open Proclamation, make Publication of Our Pleasure in the Premises, that all Persons concerned may have Notice thereof, and give punctual Obe-dience thereto. And We ordain the Sheriffs of the said Shires to cause forthwith publish this Our Proclama-tion, at the several Market-crosses within their respective Shires and Parish Kirks, and the Ministers of the respective Parishes to read the same from their Pulpits upon a Sabbath-day, after divine Service.

Given under Our Signet, at Edinburgh the Twentysecond Day of July, One thousand six hundred eighty and four, and of Our Reign the thirty sixth Year.

Per actum Dominorum secreti Concilii.

God save the King:

SIr Hugh Campbel of Cesnock indicted and accused, that where, notwithstanding by the Laws and Acts of Parliament of this Kingdom, and constant Practick thereof, the Rising of his Majesty's Subjects, or any Number of them in Arms, without and contrary to his Majesty's Command, Warrant and Authority, and the aiding, abetting, assisting, referting, supplying, intercommuning, or keeping a Correspondence with o-pen and manifest Rebels, and the outhounding or ratihabiting of them, or doing them any Favours, are Crimes of high Treason, and punishable with Forfeiture of Life, Lands and Goods; and by the 3 Act, 1 Parl. King Jam. I. it is statute, That no Man rebel against the King's Person under the Pain of Forfeiture of Life, Lands and Goods; and by the Fifth Act of his Majesty's First Session of his First Parliament, it is declared, That it shall be high Treason to the Subjects of this Kingdom, or any Number of them, more or less, upon any Ground or Pretext whatsoever, to use or continue in Arms, to make Peace, or War, or any Treaties, or Leagues with foreign Princes or Estates, or amongst themselves, without his Majesty's Special Authority and Approbation first interponed thereto.

And all his Majesty's Subjects are discharged, upon any Pretext whatsoever, to attempt any of those Things under the Pain of Treason. And by the 37 Act, 2 Parl. Jam. V. it is declared, That no Man wilfully maintain, or do Favours to open and manifest Rebels against the King's Majesty, under the Pain of Forfeiture; and by the 144 Act, Parl. 12. Jam. VI. it is statute and ordained, That no Man openly or notoriously rebel against the King's Person or Authority, or make War against the King's Lieges; and that where any declared Traitors or Rebels repair, in any Part of this Realm, none of his Majesty's Lieges shall presume to refect, supply or intercommune with them, or give them Meat, Drink, House, Harbour, or any Relief or Comfort, under the same Pain for which they are forfeited, or put to the Horn; and that immediately, upon Knowledge of their repairing in the Bounds, all his Majesty's obedient Subjects do their exact Diligence, at the utmost of their Power, in searching, seeking, taking and apprehending of the said declared Traitors, and presenting them to Justice, or in following of them while they be taken, and expelled, and put out of the Shire; and immediately to make Intimation to the Magistrates and Persons of Power and Authority in the next Shire, who shall be holden to do the like Diligence without Delay, and so from Shire to Shire, while they be apprehended and brought to Justice, or expelled and put forth of the Realm; and that they, with all possible Speed, certify his Majesty, or some of his secret Council, or some of the chief Persons of Authority and Credit dwelling within the same Shire, that such Persons are within the same, wandering about the Country, or lurking in any Part thereof, under the Pain that the Traitors or Rebels ought to have sustained in Bodies or Goods themselves, in case they have been apprehended, presented and convicted by Justice; and by the 14 Act, 6 Parl. Jam. II. it is declared, That all who shall refect such as are justified for Crimes, if the Crimes be notour, or the Trespasser convicted or declared guilty, are ordained to be punished as the principal Trespasser; and by the 97 Act, 7 Parl. Jam. V. it is statute, That no Man, wittingly or willingly, refect, supply, maintain, defend, or do Favours to any of his Majesty's Rebels, and being at the Home, within their Houses, Bounds, Lands, or Bailiaries, under the Pain of Death and Confiscation of their Moveables. And by the common Law, Laws and Acts of Parliament of this Kingdom, hounding out and Ratihabition, of Art and Part, is punishable as the principal Crime. Yet nevertheless it is of Verity, that the said Sir Hugh Campbel elder of Cessnock, shaking off all Fear of God, Respect and Regard to his Majesty's Laws and Authority, has presumed to commit, and is guilty of the said Crimes, in so far as the bloody and sacrilegious Murderers of the late Archbishop of St. Andrews, and their Accomplices, to the Number of Nine or Ten Thousand, having, in the Months of May or June, 1679. risen and appeared with Arms within the western Shires, in a desperate and avowed Rebellion against his Majesty and his Authority, having burnt his Laws and Acts of Parliament, proclaimed treasonable Declarations and Proclamations at publick Market-crosses, killed and murdered several of his Soldiers at Drumclog, assaulted the City of Glasgow, robbed and rided the Goods and Houses of his Majesty's loyal Subjects, marched up and down the Country in a warlike and military Posture, kept Councils of War, rendezvoused, exercised, appointed Commanders and Officers over them, and continued in open and avowed Rebellion, committing all Acts of Hostility and high Treason, till the 22 Day of June the said Year, that they were defeat at Bothwell-bridge. The said Sir Hugh Campbel having, upon one, or other of the Days of the said Month of June, 1679. met with Daniel Crawford in Galsoun, Thomas Ingham in Borlands, John Fergusson in Catharingsill, and several other of the said Rebels, at or near the Brigde-end of Galsoun, coming from the Rebels then in Arms, whom they left at Tolcross-park near Glasgow, the Pannel asked them where they had been; and when they had told him that they came from the Westland Army, he said, that he had seen more going to them than coming from them. And having asked them if they were to return; they told him, they knew not. Whereupon he treasonably, contrary to his Allegiance and Duty, said, that he liked not Runaways, and that they should get Help if they would bide by it, and bade them take Courage, or some such like Words to that Purpose. Wherethrough the said Sir Hugh Campbel is guilty of intercommuning with notour Rebels, they having told him that they had come from the Westland Army at Tolcross-park; and the said Pannel's not apprehending of the said Rebels, and giving Intimation to the next Magistrate. And also he was guilty and culpable of giving a treasonable Counsel and Advice, to go back and return to the rebellious Army, and also encouraging and hounding them out thereto. And also of ratihabiting, maintaining and fortifying the said Rebels in their treasonable Designs of Rebellion, by telling, they should not want Help if they would bide by it; and thereby he was guilty of the said Rebellion, and accessory thereto, and Art and Part thereof: Which being found by an Assize, he ought to be punished with the Loss and Forfeiture of Life, Lands and Goods, conform to the said Laws and Acts of Parliament, to the Terror and Example of others to commit the like hereafter.

Ye are indicted and accused, that whereas, notwithstanding by the Laws and Acts of Parliament of this Kingdom, and constant Practick thereof, particularly by the 37 Act, 2 Parl. James I. it is statute, That no Man wilfully maintain or do Favours to open and manifest Rebels against the King's Majesty, under the Pain of Forfeiture. And by the 14 Act, 6 Parl. James II. it is declared, That all who shall refect such as are justified for Crimes, if the Crimes be notour, or the Trespasser convicted or declared guilty, are ordained to be punished as the principal Trespasser. And by the 97 Act, 7 Parl. James V. it is statute, That no Man, wittingly or willingly, refect, supply, maintain, defend, or do Favours to any of his Majesty's Rebels, and being at home within their Houses, Bounds, Lands, or Bailiaries, under the Pain of Death, and Confiscation of Moveables. And by the 144 Act, 12. Parl. James VI. it is statute and ordained, That no Man, openly or notourly, rebel against the King's Person or Authority, or make War with the King's Lieges; and that where any declared Traitors or Rebels repair in any Part of this Realm, none of his Majesty's Lieges shall presume to refect, or supply, or intercommune with them, or give them any Meat, Drink, House, Harbour, or any Relief or Comfort, under the same Pain, for which they are forfeited or put to the Horn; and that immediately, upon Knowledge of their repairing in the Bounds, all his Majesty's obedient Subjects do their exact Diligence, at the utmost of their Power, in searching, seeking, taking and apprehending the said declared Traitors, and presenting them to Justice, or in following of them, while they be taken and expelled, and put out of the Shire, and immediately to make Intimation to the Magistrates, and Persons of Power and Authority, in the next Shire, who shall be holden to do the like Diligence without Delay, and so from Shire to Shire, while they be apprehended and brought to Justice, or expelled and put forth of the Realm; and that they, with all possible Speed, certify his Majesty, or some of his secret Council, or some of the chief Persons of Authority and Credit, dwelling within the said Shire, that such Persons are within the same, wandering about the Country, or lurking in any Part thereof, under the Pain that the Traitors and Rebels ought to have sustained, in their Bodies and Goods, themselves, in case they had been apprehended, presented, presented, and convicted by Justice. And by the common Law, Laws and Acts of Parliament of this Kingdom, bounding out, or Ratihibition, or Art and Part is punishable as the principal Crime. Nevertheless it is of Verity, that the said Hugh Campbel, to evidence yet further his wicked and traitorous Design of contriving the late Rebellion in the Year 1679. and that ye would, as far as was in your Power, contribute thereto, by bounding, levying, sending out thereto, according as ye did promise to Thomas Ingham, Daniel Crawford, John Ferguson, and others mentioned in his former Indictment, that he did send out to the said Rebellion, his Tenants and Servants after specified, viz. Mr. James Brown his Chaplain, George Lambie in Crofthead, James Hutchison in Underwood, Robert Parker in Wester Lensine, Michael Roxburgh Mason in Galsloun, Hector Paterson in Cesnock-yards, Hugh Neilson in Rickartoun, John Brown younger in Priestland, Alexander Wood in Highside, John Lambie in Ladybrow, Alexander Mitchel in Priestland, George Hutchison in Underwood, Matthew Reid in Graysholm, James Richmond in Lawfield, John Hunter in Shirling-hill, George Lambie Merchant in Bankhouse, William Harris Officer in Rickartoun, Glasford in Bereith, Samuel Ross in Nethertoun, John Gamil in Bank, Patrick Gamil, James Lambie in Lawfen, Hugh Willon in Burnfoot, Francis Ross in Knowhead, and several others; at the least they having gone out to the said Rebellion, and having been thereat, he did reset them upon his own Ground, without enquiring where they had been, or why they had been so long absent in so dangerous and critical a Time, when it was notour to all the Kingdom, that there was an open Rebellion carried on against his Majesty, to the Destruction of the Peace, Quiet and Security of this his native Country, as well as of the Monarchy therein established; and he did even reset, in his very House, William Gilmore, who went out of his Ground to the said Rebellion, and lived very near his own Gate before the Rebellion, and tho' he owned before his Servants in his Family, that he had been in the Rebellion, so that the same could not but be notour to him, yet he entertained him Two Years as his Porter, and thereafter gave him a Certificate as a very honest Man, and recommended him to the Earl of Dundonald. And he entertained the said Mr. James Brown, a notorious and ringleading Field-preacher, as his Chaplain in his Family, and the Persons abovenamed being his Tenants and Servants, and having gone out of his Ground to the Rebellion and immediately thereafter having returned thereto, and being ever since living therein, and he himself going up and down among them, so that, as ye were obliged to have enquired where they were, so he could not but know, that they were out at the Rebellion, especially seeing their being at the same was notour in the Country, and Two of them were his own domestick Servants, and lived in his own House. Wherethrough the said Sir Hugh Campbel has most treasonably contrived, contributed to, hounded and sent out Persons to the late Rebellion, has harboured, reset, supplied, entertained, conversed with, and done Favours to open, notour and manifest Traitors and Rebels, and was Actor, Art and Part with the same, and of the other treasonable Crimes above specified; which being found by an Assize, you ought be punished with Forfeiture of Life, Lands and Goods, to the Terror and Example of others to commit the like hereafter.

The said Sir Hugh Campbel is further indicted, and accused upon the Laws and Acts of Parliament mentioned in his former Indictments, for the treasonable harbouring, resetting, entertaining, corresponding with, and doing Favours to notour, open and manifest Traitors and Rebels, encouraging them in their rebellious Practices, and dissuading them to submit to his Majesty's Authority; in so far as Alexander Paterson in Balgray his Tenant, having, upon the first, second, third, or one or other of the Days of one or other of the Months of the Year 1682. advertised him of his having been in the Rebellion, and of his Willingness to submit to his Majesty's Authority, and craving his Advice as to what he should do, he did dissuade him and desired him to go home to his Work until he sent for him, and so he continued his Tenant, notwithstanding he knew of his being in the said Rebellion. As also he did, on one or other of the Days of the Month of June, 1679. go to the Burial of Captain Campbel, who was drowned in the Water of Galsloun as he was going to the said Rebellion; wherethrough he committed, and was guilty of the treasonable Crimes abovementioned, and was Actor, Art and Part thereof; which being found by an Assize, he ought to be punished with Forfeiture of Life, Lands and Goods, to the Terror of others to commit the like hereafter.

Cesnock's Advocates Defences. N<sup>o</sup>. XCVI. B.

Sir Patrick Home for the Pannel alledges, always denying the Indictments and haill Articles and Qualifications thereof. And as to the first Indictment; whereas it is alledged that the Defender did intercommune with the Rebels, in so far as he having met with Daniel Crawford, and the other Persons mentioned in the Libel at or near the Bridge of Galsloun, as they were coming from the Rebels then in Arms, whom they left at Tolcross-park, and did speak and discourse with them. It is answered, 1<sup>mo</sup>. That it is not relevant, unless his Majesty's Advocate condescend upon the particular Day that these Persons past the Bridge of Galsloun, which if he will do, the Defender positively offers to prove that he was alibi, and that he was at home at his own House of Cesnock at that Day.

2<sup>do</sup>. The Libel is not relevant to infer Intercommuning; seeing it bears, the Defender only met with them by the Way, and the simple meeting of Persons in the High-way, which was only accidental, and the asking them from whence they came, and whither they were going, neither by our Law, nor any Law in the World, can infer Intercommuning discharged by the Law, which can only be understood in the Case of keeping Correspondence by Letters, or of designed Meetings to treat of Things, in order to the carrying on of the Rebellion, and not of accidental Rencontres in the High-way; and if it were otherwise understood than upon that Ground, every Person that had met any Man coming from the Rebels, and had asked at him from whence he came, or whither he was going, and had inquired for News concerning these Rebels, as was very ordinary at that Time, should have been guilty of Intercommuning; which were absurd to imagine.

310. Albeit these Men declared they came from the Army of the Rebels in the West, yet the Defender was not obliged to know that they had been concurring in the Rebellion, seeing they might have been there upon another Account, for many went there who had no Design to concur in the Rebellion: For it is notoriously known that some went to bring back their Horses and Goods that were taken away by the Rebels, others to bring back their Children and Servants from such rebellious Courses. And therefore unless they have been denounced to the Horn at the head Burgh of the Shire where they dwell, it could be no Crime to speak or discourse with them, or not, to apprehend them, or not, to make Intimation to the next Magistrate, as is clear from 126 Act, Parl. 12. Jam. VI. By which it is expressly provided, That the Inhabitants of the Shire are not put in mala fide to converse or intercommune with Rebels, unless they be denounced to the Horn at the Market-cross of the Shire where they dwell; and albeit they had been forfeited Persons, and declared and denounced Rebels, as they were not, yet the intercommuning and conversing with them being only by Chance and Accident, it cannot infer the Punishment of Treason, as is clear from his Majesty's late Proclamation in April last.

410. Whereas it is libelled, that the Defender having met with these Persons at the Bridge-end of Galslow, he should have said to them, he liked not Runaways, and so is guilty of giving them treasonable Counsel and Advice to return and go back to the Rebels. It is answered, That the Words do not import Counsel nor Advice to these Persons to go back to the Rebels; and Words and Expressions can never infer a Crime, far less the Crime of Treason, unless they clearly, directly and positively infer the Crime. Next, These Words do not fall under any of the Acts of Parliament libelled upon, which are only against the rising in Arms against the King, and the wilful maintaining and doing Favour to open and manifest Rebels, that are declared Traitors, or to reset, supply or intercommune with them; so that seeing these Expressions do not fall under these express Laws, they cannot infer the Crime of Treason, it being a certain Principle in Law, that quod lege non cavetur, in practica non habetur. And these being penal Statutes, cannot be extended beyond the express Words, especially seeing the Defender was never hitherto tainted with Disloyalty, but on the contrary was ready upon all Occasions, to testify his Zeal and Affection to the King's Service, and to suppress Field-conventicles, which are the Rendezvous of Rebellion, and upon all Occasions, and in all Companies did always inveigh against that execrable Rebellion, and all rebellious Courses, as being destructive to the King's Interest, the Peace, Quiet and Well of the Kingdom.

510. Whereas it is libelled, that the Defender spoke these Words, or some such like Words to that Purpose, is not relevant in such general Terms; for seeing the Crime consists in Words, the particular Words ought to be express and condescended upon in the Libel, otherwise it is not relevant.

610. Albeit the Words mentioned in the Indictment, should amount to treasonable Expressions, yet the Defender is secure by his Majesty's gracious Act of Indemnity in July 1679. by which his sacred Majesty for the Reasons and Causes therein mentioned, does expressly indemnify all such as have spoken, written, printed, published, or dispersed any traitorous Speeches, or have advised any Thing contrary to the Laws; and generally all such as are liable for any Pursuit or Occasion relating to any publick Administration, by Convincings, Actings or Oppositions, or otherwise, preceeding the Date hereof, declaring the Generality of these Presents, to be as effectual to all Intents and Purposes, as if every Circumstance of every one of the foresaid Delinquencies or Misdemeanors were particularly and specially therein insert; and that every one of the Persons that might be challenged or pursued for the same, had a Remission under the great Seal, or an Act of Indemnity past in his Favours, discharging any of his Majesty's Officers or Subjects to pursue any Person or Persons upon any such account, either ad privatam or vindictam publicam, or to upbraid them therewith, and commanding all the Judges to interpret this his Majesty's Remission, with all possible Latitude and Favour, as they will be answerable upon the highest Peril.

As to the second additional Indictment, always denying the same, whereas it is alledged, that the Defender was guilty, in contriving of the late Rebellion, in the Year 1679. and did contribute thereto, by hounding, levying and sending out Men, as he had promised to Thomas Ingham, and the other Persons mentioned in the first Indictment, and that he had sent out to the Rebellion, the Tenants and Servants mentioned in the said Indictment; at least having gone out to the Rebellion, he thereafter reset them upon his Ground. It is answered, 1<sup>mo</sup>. That is a great Mistake, for it is not so much as libelled in the first Indictment, that the Defender promised to Thomas Ingham and the other Persons therein mentioned, to send out Men to the Rebellion.

2<sup>do</sup>. It is absolutely denied, that the Pannel did send out these or other Persons to the Rebellion, and the Tenants going out to the Rebellion, cannot make the Master liable as a Contriver, unless they went out by his express Order.

3<sup>io</sup>. Albeit the Defender had reset any of the Persons mentioned in the Indictment, on his Ground after the Rebellion, yet it was not relevant to infer the Crime of Treason, far less to make him a Contriver, because it is offered to be proven, that these Persons did either take the Bond debito tempore, obliging themselves never to rise in Arms against his Majesty or his Authority, and so it was no Crime to reset them, or they were Feuars, and he could not remove them; or they were Tenants to other Men, and so he could not be liable as resetting them on his Ground, or if any of these Persons had been in the Rebellion, it was never known to the Defender, or they were not declared Rebels, or in any porteous Roll, or denounced.

4<sup>to</sup>. As to Mr. James Brown, it is positively offered to be proven, that he removed out of the Defender's Family about fifteen Months before the Rebellion, and was never a Servant thereafter in his Family, but was Servant to the deceased Lord Craigy Lord Justice Clerk; and if at any Time thereafter the said Mr. James came to his House, it was only transiently for a Night's Time, and no Man could refuse to give a Night's Lodging to one that was a Servant to an Officer of State: And the said Mr. James Brown did continue a Servant to the Lord Craigy till he died, and thereafter was a Servant to Baldoon, but was never a Servant in the Defender's Family after the Rebellion, nor for fifteen Months before.

5<sup>io</sup>. As to William Gilmore, the Defender denies he was ever in the Rebellion, or that he gave him a Certificate in the Terms mentioned in the Indictment.

610. The resetting and intercommuning with the Persons mentioned in the Indictment, could be no Crime, seeing they were not denounced Rebels at the Market-cross of the head Burgh of the Shire where they dwell, as is clear from the 126 Act, Parl. 12. Jam. VI. by which it is provided, That albeit Denuncation at the Market-cross of Edinburgh, shall be sufficient for the intruding with the Escheat, as the same had been made at the Market-cross where they dwell.

As to the third Indictment, seeing his Majesty's Advocate passes from it, the Pannel's Procurators take Instruments thereupon.

Mr. William Fletcher further alledges for the Pannel, that the Libel is not relevant. For 1<sup>mo</sup>. All criminal Libels, especially such, by which Mens Lives, Fortunes, Reputation and Posterity are drawn in question, ought to be founded on clear and positive Law and Statute, and the Sublumption and criminal Fact ought to quadrate with the Laws contained in the Proposition; whereas the Crime libelled in this Indictment, consisting of certain Sentences and Expressions, gathered up five Years after the same are pretended to have been spoken in a transient way, to Persons who were passing by, are not founded upon any of the Acts of Parliament libelled, which do only declare what Actions are treasonable, but do not infer Forfeiture from light and rash Words, and the utmost Extent as to which the Acts of Parliament go as to this Point, is only to punish with Forfeiture, such treasonable Speeches as are malicious and advised, as appears by second Act, second Session of his Majesty's first Parliament, where it is declared to be Treason, for any Person, by writing, printing, preaching, or other malicious and advised speaking, to express or declare their treasonable Intentions, to plot, contrive or intend Death or Destruction to the King's Majesty. And this Indictment not bearing that the Expressions were advised and malicious, is not founded on the Acts of Parliament, and so is not relevant.

2<sup>do</sup>. It has been the Wisdom of the best governed Nations, not to infer the Crime of Treason from light Words, which may be rashly spoken, and the Import and Sense whereof may be easily mistaken; And therefore the Romans, who did not allow Actions to arise from Contracts, and Pactions, and Words, unless the same had been done by Stipulation, or verba solemnia, took Care to provide by their Laws, that rash Words should not be drawn in Consequence, as appears by the Lex 7. § 3. Dig. ad Leg. Jul. Majest. which bears, that lubricum lingue ad pœnam facile trahendum non est, quanquam temerari digni pœna, sic tamen ut insaniis illis parcendum est, si non tale sit delictum, quod vel ex scriptura legis descendit, vel ad exemplum legis vindicandum est. And by the Lex Vinnia Cod. si quis Imperatori maledixerit, the Emperors Theodosius, Arcadius & Honorius have declared, that si quis improbo perulantique maledicto nomina nostra crediderit laceSSenda, ac turbulentius obrektor tempore nostrum fuerit, eum pœna nolumus subjugare, sed, integris omnibus, hoc ad nostram scientiam referatur, ut ex persona hominis dicta pensemus. And by the Laws of England, the Crime of Treason cannot be inferred from bare Words or Expressions, without an overt or open Act, as appears by what that learned Lawier Sir Edward Coke hath written in his Institutions, upon the Chap. of high Treason, where he says expressly, that drivers late Acts of Parliament have ordained, that compassing by bare Words or Sayings, should be high Treason: But all these are either expell'd or expired, and it is commonly said, that bare Words may make an Heretick, but bare Words cannot make a Traitor, without an overt Act. And the Wisdom of the Makers of this Law would not make Words only to be Treason, seeing such Variety among the Witnesses about the same, as few of them agree together; but if the same be set down in writing by the Delinquent himself, this is a sufficient overt Act within the Statute. And the Reason of these Laws is, that the various accenting and pronouncing of Words may give them a different Sense, and that the Memory of Witnesses may be lubrick, and by the Custom and Practice of this Kingdom, Treason has not been inferred from naked Words without Writ, unless there had been a long Context of Sermons and Declarations, whereof the Scope and Design, as well as the Words themselves, were clear and evident: But Treason was never inferred from transient Words and half Sentences, which might be gathered together by ignorant Hearers, who cannot take up the Import and Sense of a Discourse.

3<sup>ro</sup>. As to that Part of the Libel, by which the Words therein mentioned are constructed to be a treasonable Counsel and Advice of Encouragement to the Rebels to go back; the Words cannot bear any such Construction, and at most they can only amount to a rash, advised and a treasonable Speech, and not to any Advice that these Rebels should return.

4<sup>to</sup>. Albeit the Words could be stretched to infer a Counsel of Rebellion, yet the same being consilium nudum, sine instructione, it cannot import an Accession to Rebellion, which can only be inferred from such Counsels which may be useful for carrying on the Crime; and Law hath distinguished betwixt an Exhortation and a Counsel to commit a Crime, as appears from the last Paragraph of the Institutions de facto. The Words are, certe qui nullam operæ ad furtum faciendum adhibuit, sed tantum consilium dedit, atque hortatus est ad furtum faciendum, non tenetur furti. And Vinnius upon this Paragraph says expressly, that simplex consilium sine instructione, neminem furti obligat, quantumvis furtum secutum sit. And Ulpianus in lege 50. § penult. Dig. de furtis, explaining what kind of Counsel imports an Accession to a Crime, hath these exprets Words. Consilium dave videtur, qui persuadet & impe'it, atque instruit consilio ad furtum faciendum. And Papinian, in Leg. 20. Dig. de his qui notantur infamia, says expressly, that, is qui exhortatur, mandatoris operæ non fungitur. And this is the Opinion of Clarus, Parag. fin. Qual. 86. who says, that it is communis. And albeit that such a Counsel may import the Crime of Treason, the Expression it self being treasonable, yet it cannot infer Act and Part of the Crime of Rebellion, when that comes under a distinct Consideration from treasonable Speeches.

5<sup>to</sup>. As to the Qualifications of Art and Part inferred from hounding out and Ratihabition, the same are no ways relevant, and such Qualifications can only import an Accession to private Crimes, which are committed for, or in Name of any Person, v. g. in Revenge of a Wrong done to him, but not at all in publick Crimes, which are not committed in Contemplation of the Party who hounds out or ratihabites. And therefore Lawiers are generally of Opinion, that such hounding out, or Ratihabition, does only take Place in such Crimes ubi vertitur interesse privatum, vel vindictam privatam.

6<sup>to</sup>. The Libel is not relevant in these Terms, that the Pannel spoke the Words libelled, or some such like Words to that Purpose, because, in criminibus non licet vagari, and all criminal Libels ought to be clear and and distinct, and especially as appears from Dambuderi Prax. Crim. Cap. 30. Num. 4. where he says, That omnes libellos criminales oportet esse clarissimos, and that they ought to express omnes criminis perpetrati qualitates. Wherein also Barolus and other Lawyers upon the Lex 3. Dig. de accusationibus, do agree with him. And seeing the specifick Form of this Crime consists in Words, it is necessary that the same should be express'd, nec enim accusata, cum existimatione aliena jactura & discrimine vagari. Dig. de rei vind. And by such a way of libelling the Pannel should be prejudged of his Defences; for if the Words which are to be such like, were libelled, he would make it appear that they are not Words to the same Purpose, and that they cannot import the Crime of Treason, which can only be inferred from clear and liquid Expressions, and thereupon he would obtain an Interlocutor from the Lords of Justiciary as to the Relevancy; and it were a dangerous Preparative, should Points be remitted to an Assize: And if this should hold, then his Majesty's Advocate needed not to libel any further than that the Party were guilty of Treason by giving Counsel to Rebels in general, which were most dangerous and absurd.

As to that Qualification of the Libel, that the Defender ought to have apprehended the Rebels, conform to 144 Act, 12 Parl. K. Jam. VI. the same is not relevant to infer the Conclusion of the Libel. For it is evident that the Act of Parliament could only take Place when the Country is peaceable, but not when Armies are in the Fields, for inter arma silent leges, and it would not be expected that any private Gentleman should, by seizing upon the Rebels, expose himself to the Fury of a standing Army, and quævis excusat a crimine, which consists only in Negligence & non faciundo.

It is likewise alledged, that the Defender cannot be called in question for the Crime arising from the Words libelled, in respect the same are libelled to be prior to his Majesty's Act of Indemnity, which ought to be inviolably observed: For 1<sup>mo</sup>. Amnesties and Acts of Indemnity and Oblivion, after Countries have been universally engaged in Crimes, do become the magna charta and fundamental Security of the Lieges, as to their Lives, Fortunes and Posterity. And therefore all Judges ought to be tender thereof, and rather to extend nor straiten the same by their Decision and Interpretation thereof.

2<sup>do</sup>. It is the publick Interest of the King and Nation, that such publick Indemnity should take full Effect, seeing the same bears to be made for removing all Fears and Jealousies of the People, which do expose them to commit new Crimes, and the least violating of, or impinging upon the very Borders of such Indemnities, doth again open a Way for new Fears and Jealousies, no Man knowing but what is another Man's Case this Day, may be his to morrow; and the Interpretation of such Indemnities being drawn from Grounds of Law, the People cannot know how far they may be overtaken thereby, and therefore may return to their former Apprehensions; the Consequences whereof may come to be very dangerous for the Peace and Quiet of the Kingdom. And it has been the Prudence and Policy of this and all other Nations, that when Crimes did abound and spread as a Contagion, Indemnities were granted in ample Terms, and most punctually observed.

3<sup>io</sup>. All Pardons and Graces of their own Nature are favourable, and are to be extended, and Crowns are preserved by Mercy as well as Justice; for, as Solomon says, 20 Prov. Ver. 28. Mercy and Truth preserve the King, and his Throne is upholden by Mercy. And it is the Duty of the Judges, inviolably to preserve in the Minds of his People, a Sense of his Majesty's Goodness, in securing to them these universal and publick Pardons, for nulla dote, nullo genere virtutis mortalitas propius accedit ad divinam naturæ similitudinem, quam miserrando humana imbecillitati, ignoscendo erroribus, & injurias obliviscendo. And there was never any King in the World, that has given greater Demonstrations of private Bounty and Clemency to his Subjects, than his sacred Majesty, and therefore the Indemnity being suited to his Majesty's own regal Temper and Disposition, it ought not to be straitned, but rather enlarged, if need were, by a rational Interpretation.

4<sup>to</sup>. His Majesty hath declared his enixa voluntas, that the foresaid Indemnity should be interpreted with all possible Latitude and Favour, and hath commanded his Judges to do the same upon no less Certification, than the highest Peril, which demonstrates, how serious his Majesty hath been, that all the Imperfections of his Subjects should be covered, and that nothing might remain which might give them the least Jealousy in time coming.

5<sup>to</sup>. By the 18 Act, 7 Parl. K. Jam. I. it is expressly ordained, That no Man interpret the King's Statutes otherwise than the Statutes bear, and to the Intent and Effect they were made for, and as the Maker of them understood, and who so does in the contrary, to be punished at the King's Will. And this Act of Indemnity being one of his Majesty's Statutes and Proclamations, wherein the Peace and Security of the Kingdom is highly concerned, the Sense and Extent thereof ought not to be wrested and inverted contrary to his Majesty's Meaning and the Propriety of the Words; and his Majesty having expressly indemnified all treasonable Speeches and Advices contrary to the Laws, under which General, the Words mentioned in the Indictment are genuinely and naturally comprehended; for it is evident, that the general Notion of treasonable Discourse doth comprehend the same.

King's Advocate's Answers. N<sup>o</sup>. XCVI. C.

His Majesty's Advocate craves Leave to declare, that he is very much astonished to hear, that, by our Law, it is not Treason to hound out Men to Rebellion, and therefore, to shorten the Debate, resolves only to take Notice of these Four Points.

1<sup>mo</sup>. That the Words spoken are Treason.

2<sup>do</sup>. That the conversing in these Terms, is an intercommuning with notour and open Traitors, whom he knew to be such from the Persons themselves.

3<sup>io</sup>. That these Words are relevantly libelled, quoad Time and Place, and there is no Place for alibi here.

4<sup>to</sup>. That the Words and Converse being treasonable, are not taken off by the Act of Indemnity.

As

As to the First, it is undeniable, that, to advise People to Rebellion, is, by the Law of all Nations, Rebellion, tho' the Advice consisted only in Words, as all Advices generally do; and tho' there be no particular Act of Parliament, declaring the advising to rise in Rebellion to be Treason, yet all Acts of Parliament, that declare any Crime to be punishable, but much more punishable by Treason, do, by an infallible and necessary Consequence, declare the advising that Crime, or that Species of Treason, to be punishable as the Crime it self, and a special Law were needless; and with us particularly, Art and Part of Treason is Treason by Statute, and Counsel and to advise, is the highest Qualification of Art and Part, because it gives Life, and Courage, and Being to the Crime: Nor can it be denied, that if the Doctrine of the Defence were sustained, any Man might at present go up and down the whole West, and invite and hound out to a Rebellion, and who can doubt but he would be highly guilty of the Rebellion, who did thus raise a Rebellion? and Advice certainly is far more dangerous than Action, and so should be more punishable. Nor can it be denied, but if thir Words be true, Cesnock, the Pannel, did more contribute to the Rebellion, than these pitiful Creatures he advised, his Prudence, Influence and Interest being extraordinarily greater than their Actions could have been. Likeas it is as undeniable, that, by the Roman Law, Advice to commit Lese-majesty, were Lese-majesty, cujus opera, consilio, & L. 1. Sect. 1. d. L. Jul. Majest. and the Seventh Law cited does expressly answer it self, making Words to be punished for Treason, si tale sit delictum quod ex scriptura legis desentit, as with us Art and Part, or where it is ad exemplum legis vindicandum, the Words being of great Consequence, and of extraordinary evil Example. And albeit, by that Law, light and unadvised Words, proceeding from Petulance and Extravagance, which are the very Words of these Laws, were ordinarily covered, by the Emperors, with Contempt, Pity, or Pardon; yet ubi locus venia, ibi semper subest crimen, else there needed no venia but in this Nation; and in this Case there is no Place for this Debate, for the Speaker, and the Advice, and the Design, and every Circumstance shew that these Words are malicious, and advised Words; for what could be more advised, than seriously to give Advice to poor People whom he knew he could influence in many repeated Expressions, all tending to the same End, inculcatione & geminatione verborum? and what could be more malicious than to upbraid them for leaving a Rebellion, with the hateful Name of Rumaways; and not only advise them to return to an open and most flagitious Rebellion, but to encourage them thereto, by promising them Help, or Assistance, or Officers, which shew a rooted and malicious Design to have that Rebellion prosper? Nor are the Words such mysterious Expressions, as that every Country Fellow could not but necessarily understand, being fitted designedly for their Capacity, nor could they forget them as loose and scattered Words, being a sage, a designed Advice from a Man, whose Parts, Piety and Interest they admired. And what Man alive could be such a Brute as to forget the most remarkable Thing they ever heard, upon the most remarkable Occasion, and upon a Point wherein they were so much concerned, and which they could not but lay deeply to Heart, and think often upon because it concerned them all together? and so they would remember one another, and because it was to be the Foundation of the greatest Resolutions that ever they could be concerned in. As to the Generality, objected against, of some such Words, his Majesty's Advocate craves Leave to say, That an Advice was never in more explicate and specifick Terms libelled; and in whatever Terms an Advice be given, it is still an Advice to rebel, and so Art and Part of Rebellion; nor seeks he any Latitude in his libelling the Words, further than that he said, they should have Officers, or Help, or some Expression of Help: And it cannot be denied, but if one Man should say, they would get Help, or another that they should be helped, yet all these are the same Expressions, and the same Advice, and the Words are the more to be believed, that they are not expressly the same, being to the same Purpose, and as to this he opposes his Libel.

And as to the second Point, it is undeniable, that this is not an accidental Meeting with Rebels, but it is an intercommuning with them upon the Rebellion, and upon Encouragements thereto, and tho' they were not denounced, yet he knew them more to be Rebels, than he could have known them by their Denunciation; for they themselves told him they had come from the Rebellion, and they were only going home to seek clean Clothes, which was an Acknowledgment that they were yet in the Rebellion, and a Part thereof: And this is far stronger than Monkland's Case, and many others, who have been condemned for going to seek their Bairns, or their Horses; nor do the Acts of Parliament requiring Denunciation militate in this Case, since Denunciation is but a legal, and supposed, whereas this is a certain and proper Knowledge.

To the Third it is urged, that it is an uncontroverted Principle in our Law, that no Defence contrary to the Libel can be admitted, for that were to admit a formal Probation, that the King and the Pursuer's Witnesses are still perjured, it being undeniable, that if the King's Witnesses prove that Cesnock was in such a Place at such a Time, spoke such Words to such Men; but if Cesnock's Witnesses prove that Cesnock was not there, certainly either of the Two Witnesses must be guilty of Perjury, the Fact being clearly libelled to have been expressly done, and therefore our Law has justly abhorred, as well as rejected such Defences as are contrary to the Libel, and as, amongst many other Instances, was expressly so decided in the Case of Mr. William Somerwel, and in the Case of M<sup>r</sup> Leod, and M<sup>r</sup> Niel of Bara, in which Case alibi of Five Miles Distance was repelled: And albeit alibi may be sometimes admitted, where it is consistent with the Libel, as where the Deed is not very specifickly libelled; yet in this Case, where the Fact is specifickly and clearly libelled to have been expressly done, and that the Witnesses knew the Pannels, and that there is no Impossibility in the Thing; as for Instance, if Cesnock should have proven himself to have been for Six Months both by Sea, and after, at London or Paris, and should have proven this by Witnesses, beyond all Exception, the Justices might, eo casu, possibly prefer him to the Probation of his alibi, because of the Inconsistency and Impossibility of the Thing: Yet it were most absurd, and of very irreparable Consequence, to admit Cesnock to prove an alibi of Half a Mile, and by his own Friends, Tenants and Servants, for he might, in few Minutes, have gone to that Town without Observation; and is it not much more equitable, as well as legal, to believe Three Witnesses, who must be eternally damned for no Advantage, and living in a Country to which it will be impossible to return, if the Thing be false, than the Laird's own Tenants and Servants, who, besides the general Kindness, are of one Sect, that think there is no Sin to bring off their own Friends, as is to be seen in very palpable Instances? And by the Nature of our Assizes of Error, it is clear, that our Law believes, that Men are much more inclined to assuage than to condemn; nor shall ever the King prove the Treason, or any clapped Man may be proved criminal, if if this Kind of alibi be sustained, and for this Cause no Evidences are received and sworn against the King in England.

As to the Act of Indemnity, the Act it self is opposed, wherein the whole Scope will shew, that there is no Design to secure by it, fanatick Heritors and Ministers, but only the poor and deluded Multitude; and therefore his Majesty does expressly except, not only the Heritors and Ministers who have been in the Rebellion: But

2do. Such as were Contrivers of it. And 3<sup>io</sup>. Such Heritors as contributed thereto by Men or Money; and what is a more clear and express contributing to a Rebellion by Men, than to advise Men to go to it, and to encourage them to go to it, and to promise them Assistance? And the Laird of Cesnock's Countenance and Well-wishing to that Cause, could have actually contributed more than a little Heritor sending out one or Two Men, and yet that little Heritor would have been guilty, tho' contributing far less. As also, according to this his Promise and Encouragement, the Pannel did send, or at least connive at a great many of his Tenants and Servants going to the Rebellion, and, as a Sign of his Affection, did suffer them peaceably to live upon his Ground, after their Return from the Rebellion: Nor is his Majesty's Advocate resolved to debate this Refet, as he might, to be, per se, the Crime of Treason and Rebellion, being resolved here only for to use it as an high Aggravation and Qualification of his having contributed toward the Success and Encouragement of that Rebellion; for tho' a Nobleman or Gentleman, who lived in a Country distant from his Tenants, or being amongst them, meddled a little with them, might pretend some favourable Construction for his Ignorance, Oversight, or Connivance; yet Cesnock having promised Encouragement, and being himself, and for many Years, founded upon the Principles of Self-defence, whereupon Bothwell-bridge was built, and having gone alongst, in the last Age, in far more open and dangerous Opposition to the King's Authority than Bothwell-bridge was, and having very many Tenants amongst whom he conversed every Day, being a diligent and knowing Man, it is impossible for any Man of common Sense to understand how any Man of his Intelligence and Sense could not have been most watchful over them, and not suspect, having so much Interest in these Tenants and Servants, whom even silly and remote Strangers knew to have been in the Rebellion, especially seeing so notorious a Man as Mr. Brown, who, tho' he was not his Servant, yet frequented his House, and wherever he lived, Cesnock could not but hear that he was in the Rebellion, being the ken-speckled Man in it, and his own Porter, being born within a Mile of his House, in his own Land, and notoriously known by all his own Servants, to have been in the Rebellion, he having owned universally, without Reserve or Secrecy, to the whole Servants, that he was in the Rebellion; and yet, after he had kept him as long as he could agree with the young Lady, he sent him away with a Certificate and Recommendation. All which being joyned, does clear that he was one of these ringleading contriving Heritors, who is excepted by the Act of Indemnity, especially seeing writing and speaking is not at all relative to Rebellion, but to misrepresenting Judicatories, &c. The Citations adduced by the Pannel's Procurators are not answered, because his Majesty's Advocate thinks them only Places common, and ill applied. The Lords continue this criminal Action and Cause, and all further Trial therein till to morrow, and ordain the Pannel to be carried back to Prison, under the Pain of Four hundred Merks, the Witnesses and Assizers to attend.

MR. Walter Pringle, for the Pannel, as to the Defence founded upon the Defender's alibi, when the pretended Expressions were alledged to have been spoken, duplies, that the said Defence is most relevant, and is no ways elided by the Replies; for albeit the Defence is a Negation of the Libel, yet it is not pura negatio, but is negativa, coercitata loco & tempore, qua maxime cadit sub sensu testis, and such Negatives are perpetually sustained in all criminal Actions, ad probandam innocentiam rei, according to the unanimous Opinion of all Lawiers who write upon the Subject of Crimes; and the Defence that Cesnock was at home in his own House all that Day, that the Persons mentioned in the Libel came to Galsfoun, is so circumstantiated and circumscribed by Time and Place, as that it is naturally impossible he could have met with them at Galsfoun-bridge that same Day, except the Absurd of bilocatio corporum were allowed. And whereas it is pretended, that the Defence is never sustained, but where the Distance of the Place is such, as that it was impossible the Parry could be present:

It is duplied, that this Pretence is most irrelevant; for albeit the Distance of alibi were but Half a Mile, or only distinct Rooms in the same House, yet it is as really alibi, as if the Distance were an hundred Miles; so that whatever be the Distance, if it be clearly proved for the Pannel, by famous Witnesses, that he was all that Day in his own House, it is as naturally impossible he could have been at Galsfoun-bridge, as if he had been all that Week at Paris. And it cannot be controverted, but if a Murder were committed in the next Room, and that a Person in another Room of the same House should be accused for it, the Defence of alibi would be sustained, if he could prove by Witnesses, that he went not out of his own Room all that Day when the Murder was committed, the Witnesses being present with him all that Time; and as this Defence is unquestionably relevant, so it cannot be presumed but to be most true, it being well known that Cesnock is a most circumspect Person, and hath constantly, upon all Occasions, declared his Abhorrence of all rebellious Courses, and hath always, at the Bar, declared before almighty God, upon his solemn Oath, that he never spoke these Words, nor any treasonable Words to that Purpose, directly or indirectly, to these nor any other Persons; and if he were of such wicked Principles, it is not rational to imagine, that he would disown them upon so solemn and sacred an Oath, but that he would rather satisfy himself with a bare Denial; especially when he knows his Oath cannot absolve him, and consequently there was never greater Reason, in any Case, for sustaining the Defence of alibi, than in this Case; and his Majesty's sty's Advocate ought to condescend upon the precise Day that the alledged Words were spoken, all Lawiers being positive, and particularly Carpf. Par. 3. Quæst. 103. Num. 35. that when the Defence of alibi is proposed, the express Day, when the Crime was committed, must be exprest; and he asserts this as the common Opinion, a qua nequaquam est recedendum, and cites many of the famous Lawiers, as Bajon, Clarus, Juson and Mascardus.

As to the Replies against the Defence founded upon the Act of Indemnity, it is duplied, that the Defence is unanswerably clear: For 1<sup>mo</sup>. It cannot be controverted, but that the pretended Expressions, mentioned in the Libel, are comprehended in clear and express Terms, under the general Clause of the Act of Indemnity, whereby, in express Words, all Persons are indemnified, who have spoken, written, printed, published and dispersed any traiterous Speeches, or have advised any Thing contrary to the Laws; which Clause is so clear and comprehensive, that it is impossible to suppose any Case where Treason had been committed, either by transient Speeches, or even by a Tract of Discourse, or by treasonable Counsel or Advice, but the same will fall under the said general Clause, and be thereby indemnified.

2<sup>do</sup>. The Exception, in the said Act of Indemnity, of all such Heritors or Ministers, who have been in the late Rebellion, or were Contrivers thereof, and such Heritors as have contributed thereto any Levies of Men or Money, can never be stretched to deprive Cesnock of the Benefit of the Indemnity; because, albeit the Expressions libelled were true, as they are not, it is impossible that they can ever infer the several Cases whereupon the Exception is founded; for it is neither libelled, nor can it be pretended, that Cesnock was actually in the late Rebellion, nor yet that he contributed thereto by the Levies of Men or Money, but on the contrary he concurred, to the utmost of his Power, to suppress the same, and did always declare his Abhorrence thereof, and kept his Houses and Arms from being taken by the Rebels. And as to the other Case of the Exception, whereby Contrivers are excepted, it is not possible, with any Propriety of Words, to infer from the Expressions in the Libel, that Cesnock was a Contriver of the Rebellion, because the true and proper Sense and Meaning of Contrivers, is only where a Person hath consulted and combined with the Ringleaders to raise the Rebellion, and hath laid down Methods for that effect, which cannot in the least be inferred from the Words of the Libel, seeing the Rebellion was contrived, formed, and had proceeded to a great Height, before the pretended Expressions were emitted; and therefore, by a necessary and clear Consequence, can never be understood to have been contrived by these pretended subsequent Expressions, which could never be the Cause or Occasion of that which had formerly taken effect, and had been so far consulted and contrived, as to break out to an open Rebellion before the pretended Expressions.

3<sup>io</sup>. What is understood by Contrivers, is clearly explained in the subsequent Words of the Exception, viz. Such Heritors are only to be understood who have contributed by Levies of Men or Money; which Words are not infer alternative, but copulative, and as an Explanation of the Word Contriver.

4<sup>to</sup>. If reasonable Expressions relating to the late Rebellion be so interpret, as to infer a Contrivance thereof, then the Benefit of the Indemnity, as to all Heritors and Ministers, will be frustrated in every Case, just as if the Exception had been absolute and simple, without any Qualifications: For it is certain, that in all House and Field-conventicles, the Ministers did not only preach in downright Terms, and maintained and defended the horrid Principles of Rebellion against his sacred Majesty and his Government, but also, in direct Terms, encouraged and incited the People to rise in open Arms, and the Rebellion did immediately follow: And yet the Lords of Justiciary have never denied the Benefit of the Indemnity to any such Ministers or Heritors present at such Conventicles; so that it appears evidently that treasonable Preachings and Discourses, albeit previous to the Rebellion, never have been interpret to infer the Contrivance mentioned in the Exceptions, and far less can the same be inferred from treasonable Expressions, emitted after the contriving and actual raising of the Rebellion. And if such Expressions should be stretched to infer a Contrivance, it is impossible to suppose a Case where an Heritor or Minister is guilty of traiterous Speeches relating to the late Rebellion, but he may still be brought under the Compass of that Exception, and be debarred from the Benefit of the Indemnity, because it may be always pretended, that such Expressions and treasonable Speeches, if previous to the Rebellion, did encourage the People to rise in Arms, and if subsequent to the Rebellion, that they encouraged the People to continue, and infer a Ratification; so that, by these Pretences, the Exception is as large as the Rule, and the Indemnity will prove a Snare to all Heritors and Ministers who had just Reason, by the general Clause of the Indemnity, and the express Words, to look upon themselves as thereby secured from the Guilt of all treasonable Speeches, spoken, written, printed, published, or, and of all Counsel and Advice contrary to the Laws, unless a clear Contrivance of the Rebellion by contriving with the Ringleaders in raising thereof, and contributing thereto by Levies of Men or Money, were made out against them, which is not, nor cannot be pretended against the Pannel.

As by the common Laws of all Nations, all Indemnities and Acts of Oblivion must be favourable, and largely interpret and extended, and not merely limited in Prejudice of the Persons who claim the Benefit thereof, so, by the Indemnity it self, all his sacred Majesty's Judges are expressly commanded to interpret the same with all possible Latitude and Favour, as they will be answerable upon their highest Peril; and such Clauses are usual in all his Majesty's Indemnities and Acts of Oblivion, as may appear by the Indemnity after his Majesty's Restauration; whereby it is expressly ordained, that every Clause and Word thereof be understood in the most favourable Sense the Expression can bear; and consequently the Pannel may justly expect, that the Lords of Justiciary will allow him the Benefit of his Majesty's gracious Pardon, will not suffer the general Word in the Exception of Contrivers, to be inferred from the pretended Expressions mentioned in the Libel, upon nice and empty Debates and Stretches, contrary to the true Meaning, Import and Design of the said Indemnity.

6<sup>to</sup>. Whereas it is pretended, that the Exception does comprehend all Heritors who have been actually in the Rebellion, so it may comprehend all such Heritors who are not Art and Part of the Rebellion, or are accessory thereto.

It is answered, that the Allegiance ought to be repelled, because the Exception can only be understood according to the express Terms and Qualifications thereof, viz. That such Heritors are only debarred who have been in the late Rebellion, or were Contrivers thereof by contributing thereto, of levying of Men or Money, and Art and Part, or any Accession to the Rebellion, otherwise than according to these express Contriving imports an antecedent Accession, which could not take Place here, it being acknowledged by the Libel, that the Rebellion was formed in Being before this accidental Rencounter, so that he is certainly within the Terms of his Majesty's Indemnity, and craves his Majesty's Advocate's Concourse for Maintenance thereof.

Sir George Lockhart's Triplies to Cefnock's Advocates. No. XCVI. E.

Sir George Lockhart for the Pursuer, does insist upon that Point of the Libel, that the Pannel did intercommune and converse with the Persons condescended upon and libelled, who had been, and still were to be considered as in the State of Rebellion. And as to the Objection, that they were not denounced at the Market-crofs of the head Burgh of the Shire of the same, is most irrelevant, because, albeit after a Rebellion is sopped and extinguished, and that Persons who had been engaged in the same, did publicly converse, and go up and down, the Act of Parliament mentioned in the Defence, may take Place by Denunciation at the Market-crofs, to proceed to put Persons in mala fide; yet it is absurd and contrary to all Law and Reason, that the said Act of Parliament requires any such Solemnity, as to Persons engaged in an actual State of Rebellion, it being strange to suppose or imagine, that his Majesty's Subjects might converse with Rebels actually engaged in Arms, or that it were a possible Case to use the Solemnities of Denunciations at a Market-crofs against a Concourse and Combination of execrable Rebels, before they were dissipated, or the Rebellion extinguished.

2<sup>do</sup>. The Pursuer does also insist upon the Libel, as founded upon the Words and Expressions condescended upon, as being treasonable in the highest Degree, and a downright Accession to the Rebellion, it being certain by the common Principles of all Law, that mandans vel consulens delictum, tenetur ad poenam ordinariam delicti, as being the Spring, Rise, and Source of the same; and the Words libelled, do directly import a Counsel and Advice to the Persons condescended upon, to return to the Rebels, and the Reasons and Motives condescended upon, that they would not want Help or Officers, were equally Treason. And as to the Objection made, that it was nudum consilium, and there was no Instruction, and albeit the Words should import the Crime of Treason, yet not an Accession to the Rebellion.

It is answered: The Words and Expressions libelled, are a clear, evident and plain Advice, that are not capable of any benign Sense or Interpretation: And the Pursuers do not understand what is meant by Intrusion; for there was no Necessity to condescend upon the particular Way and Method, how they were to return and serve in the Rebellion: But the Words contain more than the Law requires; for they not only contain a Counsel and Advice, but condescend upon Motives and Reasons, which are the highest and most rational Instruction for enforcing of Counsel, not only from the Authority and Influence of the Person Giver, in expressing his Dislike with their coming from the Rebels, but also containing a Motive and Reason of their Encouragement, that they would not want Help, or be supplied with Officers.

And as to the Pretence that the Words are treasonable, yet they import no Accession to the Rebellion. It is answered, That all Counsels and Advices import and assume the Nature of that Crime to which the Counsel and Advice is given. As for Example, a Counsel and Advice to commit Murder, is an Accession to Murder, and just so in the Crime of Theft, and all other Crimes, and a Counsel and Advice to joyn with, or return to Rebels, is directly an Accession to the Rebellion, the Action it self, and the Counsel to which it relates, being in all Cases one and the same Crime.

And as to that Objection against the Relevancy of the Libel, that the Words condescended upon bear that Expression, or such like, and that non licet vagari in criminalibus.

It is answered: The Objection is frivolous, and the Libel being special as to the Words, there is no Generality or Uncertainty as to that Clause, or such like, because it cannot admit of any Variation which is material, or can alter the Sense or Import of the Words libelled; and whatever Defences can be competent to the Pannel for taking off the Words libelled, will no less militate against any Words or Expressions which are equivalent; and it is a rare Conceit to imagine, that if the Witnesses to be adduced to prove the Libel, should vary in Expressions not material, that therefore the Libel were not relevant, or were not proven.

As to that Allegiance, that the Pannel was alibi, and was in his own House at Cefnock at the Time, when the Witnesses can be able to prove the Words libelled, and that the Pursuer ought to condescend upon the Day, to the effect the Defence of alibi may be competent.

It is answered, 1<sup>mo</sup>. That this Objection is contrary to Law, and there cannot be a more dangerous Precomparative to his Majesty's Interest, and whereupon the greatest of Criminals and Malefactors might escape. For 1<sup>mo</sup>. both the common Law, and the Laws of this Kingdom, and the inviolable Practick of the Court in criminal Libels, there needs no more Condescendence than the Year and Month, and as to which the Law is clear and positive, in that Title where the same is ex professo under Consideration, viz. Digest. de accus. & inscript. Leg. 3. where the Words are, libellorum inscriptionis conceptio talis est. Lucius professus est se meminisse, Leg. Jul. de Adult. ream deferri quod dicat eam cum Gaudio Sevio in civitate illa, domo illius, mense illo, consulibus illis, &c. and again, neque autem diem neque horam invitum comprehendit.

2<sup>do</sup>. It is the common Opinion of all Lawiers, particularly Gomes, in that Title qualiter formetur accusatio, where he states the Question, and does positively resolve in these Words, Si vero factum aut delictum omni tempore est punibile, dies & hora commissi criminis non debet poni nec inseri in libello, nec probare, quia per hoc nimis coarctaretur accusator, & tenderet in grave damnum reipublica. And again he says in the same Place in express Words, imo quod accusator, etiam monitus & requisitus ab adversario, non tenetur ponere diem, nec horam commissi criminis, nec iudex possit eum ad hoc compellere; and of the same Opinion is Johannes Clarus, Quast. 12. Num. 13. Farin. and others.

3<sup>do</sup>. How is it possible it can be otherwise? for suppose that the Witnesses to be adduced by the Pursuer shall prove positively the Crime, and the Person who commits the same, and the Circumstances in which it it was committed, can there be no contrary Probation allowed, either directly, or by Inference, to take off the Force of that Probation? which were just to allow Witnesses to depone contra dictum testium: But as the Point is clear in the general, so there is no Necessity to enlarge upon this Debate, as to this special Case, in regard the alibi condescended upon, viz. that the Pannel was at his House in the Town of Galsoun, about Half a Mile distant from the Place condescended upon and libelled, by no Law was ever admitted, either in judicio civili or criminali; and the Reason is clear and undeniable, in respect it is possible in such a circumstance, that the Pannel might have been guilty of the Words libelled, and might have had Opportunity of meeting with the Witnesses, specially there being no Qualifications condescended upon to enforce the alibi, as that he was detentus in carcere, or affixus lecto, but does acknowledge to be in perfect Health, going up and down doing his Affairs, and so is a Case toto caelo different from an alibi so circumstance and qualified by reason of the Distance, that there was impossibilitas natura. And as to that Allegiance, that the Pannel has the Benefit of his Majesty's Indemnity, which extends to all treasonable Speeches, and to be interpreted in the greatest Latitude, and most benignly and favourably.

It is answered, 1<sup>mo</sup>. That the Act of Indemnity is opposed; for first, it is clear by the Act it self, it is not a simple Indemnity, but contains the Exceptions therein mentioned, and therefore must be congruously interpret, that it may not only import an Indemnity, as to such for whom it was intended, but also that such as were excepted and excluded, should not enjoy the Benefit of the said Indemnity.

2<sup>do</sup>. It is acknowledged, that treasonable Speeches having no Relation to the Rebellion, do fall under the Indemnity, and are secured thereby; and there are many Instances of treasonable Speeches, which need not be condescended upon.

The Exceptions in the Act of Indemnity are plain and clear, that Heritors who were Contrivers of the Rebellion, and Contributors thereto, by Levies of Men or Money, should not enjoy the same. The plain Meaning, and English whereof, does comprehend all Accession to the Rebellion, and the Words libelled do import a direct Accession to the Rebellion.

And as to the Objection, that none can be reputed a Contriver of the Rebellion, but such who advised the first Rising and Eruption of the Rebels.

It is answered: The Pretence is most irrelevant; for a Rebellion being equally to be considered in relation to the first Eruption, and to all breaking forth of the same, it is against Sense to pretend, that there is any rational Difference, whether one did advise the first Eruption of the Rebellion in one Corner of the Kingdom, or did advise, in order to the increasing and strengthening of the Rebellion in another Corner of the Kingdom, the Crime as to the Atrocity being the same; and Rebellions are not to be looked upon as the Result of formed and communicated Counsels, but every Act and every Advice in relation to Rebellion is of the same Nature, and a Contrivance, and a strengthening and increasing of the Rebellion, and so justly excluded from the Act of Indemnity; and to advise, and to contrive a Rebellion in the West, was just the same Contrivance as to contrive a Rebellion in Galloway, where it first broke out.

The Case does also fall under that Clause by contributing to the Rebellion, by Levies of Men or Money; for contributing by Levies, cannot be understood as if Levies were raised by Authority, but only that Persons run to the Rebellion; and therefore the giving Advice to any, either to go to Rebellion, or to return to the same, was perfectly to contribute by sending of Men to the Rebellion; and if it were otherwise, the Exceptions contained in the Act of Indemnity were of no Import or Significance; and all that was intended by the Indemnity in relation to that Rebellion, was but to secure the deluded Multitude, who were easily imposed upon, and led by Influence or Example, but otherwise to secure Heritors who were Contrivers of the Rebellion, or contributed thereto; and if any such Thing could be sustained, it would evacuate the Indemnity as to the Exception, and condemn the publick Procedures already made against such Persons who fall under that Head of Contrivers of the Rebellion, or Contributors thereto, albeit with that Artifice and Cunningness they did not appear, nor were not actually engaged in the Rebellion.

Sir Patrick Home quadruples to that, that the Expressions mentioned in the Dictay are not only treasonable Words, but do import Counsel and Advice to these Persons to go back to the Rebellion. It is answered, That the Expressions mentioned in the Indictment, are not treasonable Words, seeing they do not fall under any express Law against Treason; and albeit such rash and inconsiderate Expressions might make a Man liable to an arbitrary Punishment, yet they can never infer the Pain of Treason, which can only be inferred from these express Cases mentioned in the Laws; and penal Laws are to be restricted and not extended, as is clear from all Lawiers on that Subject, and particularly Carp. Par. 1. Quast. 9. Num. 13. Penales sanctiones in iis tantummodo casibus recipienda sunt, quorum expressa fit mentio in legibus, neque enim poena gravior alicui imponi debet, nisi in casibus jure expressis. And Par. 2. Quast. 56. Quod in poenis, vel statutis poenibus extra proprietatem verborum fieri non debet, ad Leg. 42. Dig. de poenis, interpretatione legum, poena multanda sunt potius quam asperanda.

2<sup>do</sup>. The Expressions cannot import Counsel and Advice, so as to infer the Crime of Treason, seeing Crimes cannot be inferred from remote Causes and Inferences, to make the Party liable ad poenam ordinariam. As for Instance, if a Man having been fighting with his Neighbour, they should be separated, and as they were coming out of the Way, should meet with another, and he should ask him from whence he came, and he should answer him, he came from such a Place where he was fighting with his Neighbour, and that he came away and left him, and the Person should say, he liked not Runaways, and bid him take Courage, and if he would bide by it he would get Help; it were absurd to pretend the Person that met him by the Way, and had these Expressions to him, should be guilty of the Man's fighting with his Neighbour; and the like may be instanced in many Cases of the like Nature.

It is the Opinion of all Lawiers, that when it is provided by a Statute, that the Person who gives Counsel and Advice should be liable to the same Punishment, is only understood of Counsel and Advice before the committing of the Crime, but not thereafter. Bartol. in Leg. furtum, Dig. de furtis, par. 2. Marcel. Con. 30. Num. 31 and 32. Statutum dicens quod prestans auxilium, consilium vel favorem malefico, tali pœna puniatur, debet intelligi quando maleficium est in fieri, secus autem in malefico jam facto perfecte & consummato, & sic ante non post delictum, quia de illo statuto loquitur. And Minochius Cas. 351. Num. 6. requiritur quod consilium præcedat delictum, nam si secuto delicto daret consilium, illud certe is frustratorum, nec enim suafus delinquens eo consilio ad delictum perpetrandum processit.

Whereas it is pretended, that the Indictment, in so far as it is libelled that the Defender spoke these Words, or some such Words to that Purpose, is relevant in these general Terms, seeing the Pursuers condescend that the Defenders had the like Words to encourage the Party.

It is answered, That the Defender spoke these Words or such like alternative, is not relevant, it being a certain Principle in Law, that whenever a Crime consists in Words, the specifick Words ought to be condescended upon, for if the libelling of a Crime arising from a particular Fact, as the Fact and Deed must be condescended upon, and the Libel will not be relevant in these Terms, that the Defender committed the Fact and Deed, or some such Deed to that Purpose; so by the same Reason when a Crime is libelled arising from Words, the particular specifick Words ought to be condescended upon, seeing the varying of a Syllable or a Letter, will also alter the Meaning and Sense of the Words, and if it were otherwise, then the Pursuer might libel no more but treasonable Words in general, which were absurd.

Whereas it is alledged, that the conversing with the Persons mentioned in the Indictment, doth infer Intercommuning with notour Rebels, seeing the Defender did know that they had been in the Rebellion. It is answered, That it is absolutely denied that the Defender did know that any of these Persons had been in the Rebellion, and private Knowledge being actus animi & intellectus, which can only be proven by Writ, or Oath of Party, which cannot be admitted in this Case; but if it were allowed, he could very freely declare, as he has already done, that he did not know that these Persons were in the Rebellion. And seeing the Law has fixed on that solemn and specifick Act of Denunciation at the Market-crofs of the Shire where the Rebels dwelt, to be the only Thing that puts Lieges in mala fide, to supply or intercommune with these Persons who had been at the Rebellion, no other Thing, how notour soever, can put the Lieges in mala fide, but only the Denunciation at the Market-crofs of the Shire, conform to the expresse Act of Parliament. And it is evident by his Majesty's Proclamation in April last, that the resetting, supplying and intercommuning with Persons that have been in the Rebellion, does not infer the Crime of Treason, unless they were denounced at the Horn, and forfeited for Rebellion. And seeing his Majesty's Advocate has already declared, that he makes only Use of that Article of the Libel as a Qualification, the Defender needs say no more but oppose the Act of Parliament, which sufficiently takes it off.

610. Whereas it is alledged that the Defence of alibi is contrary to the Libel, and so cannot be sustained. It is answered, that albeit it be no Nullity in a criminal Libel, if the Libel bear the Crime to have been committed upon one or other of the Days of such a Month, in such a Year of God; yet if the Defender desire the Pursuer to condescend upon a precise Day, he ought to condescend thereupon, that he may not be precluded of his Defence of alibi, which is not contrary to the Libel, but elides the Libel. As for Instance, if it had been libelled that the Defender had killed a Man at Edinburgh, on one or other of the Days of June 1679. and the Pursuer condescending upon a particular Day, and the Defender should prove, that all that Day he was at home at Cefnock, this were enough to elide the Libel, which is clear both from the civil and common Law. Cap. final. parag. libellorum, Quæst. 8. and from all the Lawiers who write upon that Subject. And particularly Bartol. in Leg. is qui reus, Num. 10. Dig. de Imp. judiciis, & Jason in lege arbitraria, 2. parag. si quis Ephefi. Num. 6. de eo qui certo loco. And Farin. Quæst. 1. Num. 20. And Gail. Lib. 1. Obser. 64. who is expresse, that albeit it be no Nullity of the Libel, albeit the particular Day be not condescended upon, yet if the Party desire, he ought to condescend, nam omisso diei reo auferret defensionem, ergo exprimenda, quia probare possit eo die in tali loco non fuisse. As also, this is clear from the Law of our neighbour Nation of England; as appears by 37 Statute K. Henry VIII. by which it is statute, that in all criminal Libels, the Day and Place must be condescended upon; and from our own Law, Cap. 8. Quon. attac. By which it is provided, that the Names of the Parties, Day, Year, and Month should be expresse, and Damage must be condescended upon; So that by the Law it is as necessary to expresse the precise Time in the Libel, if required, as to condescend upon the Party's Name, the Cause of Complaints, and the Place where the Crime was committed. And as this is clear in the general, much more ought the Pursuer to condescend in this particular Case, seeing if the Pursuer condescend on the Day, the Defender not only offers to prove alibi that Day, but that he was all the Day at home in his own House. Quæ est defensio certata loco & tempore; and so being a positive Exception, ought to be sustained to elide the Libel, especially seeing it is likewise offered to be proven by Persons that were present in Company with Ingrham, Crawford and Fergusson the Time they past through the Galsfoun, that the Defender was not with them at that Time, and albeit the Defender's House be not at that Distance from the Galsfoun, that it was impossible in Nature he could be there, yet he condescends so pregnantly, that it is equivalent to a physical Impossibility that he could be there, seeing it is positively offered to him in Company all the whole Day, and the Persons who were present with Ingrham, and the rest mentioned in the first Indictment, all the Time they past the Galsfoun, and the Defender was not with them, which is so circumstantiated an alibi, that it is beyond all question relevant to elide the Libel. And as to Gomez and other Lawiers cited, that seem to be of the contrary Opinion, it is evident, that there they do not state the Case of alibi, but only if the Libel without condescending on the Day be relevant, as to which it is not controverted; But these and all other Lawiers upon that Subject are clear of the Opinion, that when the Defender requires the Pursuer to condescend upon the precise Day, that it ought to be condescended upon, that the Defender be not precluded of his just Defence of alibi.

7<sup>mo</sup>. Whereas it is alledged, that the Defender falls under the Exception of the Act of Indemnity, both as a Contriver and Contributor to the Rebellion.

It is answered, 1<sup>mo</sup>. That the Defender cannot be reputed a Contriver, neither can those Words and Expressions contained in the Indictment import a Contrivance, being only, as is acknowledged by the Indictment, spoken at a transient Meeting on the High-way, and it is not to be imagined that any Man of common Sense or Reason would go and contrive a Rebellion with any Persons he met on the High-way.

2<sup>do</sup>. Contrivance must necessarily be understood of consulting and advising Things that are previous to the Rebellion, and which might give a Rise thereto, and not by a transient Discourse, and that Contrivance should be so largely extended, as to comprehend all Expressions that looked like Treason; the Exception would be as general as the Rule, and upon that Ground the former Part of the Act of Indemnity would be altogether evacuate.

3<sup>10</sup>. As these Expressions cannot infer a Contrivance, far less a contributing by levying of Men, which can only be understood in the proper Terms of assembling Men together to carry on the Rebellion, which cannot be in the least pretended in this Case; and the Defender was so far from countenancing any Thing that had the least Tendency to Rebellion, that he did upon all Occasions testify his Abhorrence of all rebellious Courses, and gave a signal Instance of it in April 1679. about a Month before the Rebellion; in so far as fines of the Shire, immediately the Noblemen and Gentlemen of the Shire met, and wrote a Letter to the Lord Chancellor, which was drawn by the Defender, and subscribed by him, and a great Part of the Gentlemen of the Shire, by which they acquainted his Lordship with the Murder of one of the Soldiers in the Night, and the wounding the other; as also of some armed Field-conventicles of a considerable Number of the Commons occasioned by unsound, turbulent and hot-headed Preachers, making it their Work to draw the People to Schism and Separation from the pure Ordinances, and instil in them the Seed of Rebellion; and out of their Sense of their Duty to Authority, the Good of Religion, the Peace and Quiet of the Kingdom, did think it fit to signify to the Lord Chancellor, their Detestation and Abhorrence of such horrid Practices, and that they should endeavour not to be wanting in their Capacities and Stations, what was becoming good Christians and loyal Subjects. Which was a most loyal Letter, and a clear Demonstration that the Defender is of most loyal Principles, and was so far from being a Contriver of the Rebellion, or having any Access thereto, that upon the first Appearance of any Insurrection, he did give timely Advertisement to the Lord Chancellor, that effectual Course might be taken for preventing thereof, and for crushing the Cockatrice in the Egg; so that it is not to be imagined that a Man of these Principles, and who did write such a Letter, could be guilty of any Expressions that had the least Tendency to Rebellion. And as a further Evidence of his Detestation and Abhorrence of the Rebellion, it is offered to be proven, that whenever he was informed that any of his Servants went to Conventicles, immediately he paid them their Fees, and dismissed them out of his Service, and would not retain any who haunted Conventicles; and when he got Notice of any of his People that abstained from publick Ordinances, he did always acquaint the Sheriff-depute of the Shire, and caused fine and punish them according to Law, and did never suffer any of the Rebels to come to his House, nor got they any of his Horses, Servants or Arms to assist. But immediately when he heard of any of the Rebels being near his House, he left his House and came to Edinburgh to joyn with his Majesty's Forces, which was all a prudent and loyal Man could do at that Time. As also, it is positively offered to be proven, that he dissuaded all his Tenants to joyn in the Rebellion, and informed them to take the Bond; and therefore he ought to have the Benefit of his Majesty's gracious Act of Indemnity. And if such as have been at Field-conventicles, or illegal Administrators of the Sacraments, and had maintained Positions, that it was lawful to rise in Arms for Reformation of Religion, condemned by the second Act of the second Session of his Majesty's first Parliament, and the Preachers at all these Conventicles, if such as these should have the Benefit of his Majesty's Indemnity, as certainly they have, much more the Defender, who has given such signal Testimonies of his Loyalty. Seeing it is clear, that his Majesty's Design is, that the said Act of Indemnity should be extended in the utmost Latitude, which is agreeable to the common Law, L. 3. Dig. de constitutione. Principio beneficium imperatoris, quod a divina sciz. ejus indulgentia proficiscitur, quam plenissime interpretari debemus. And if the Exception of the Act of Indemnity should be otherwise understood, there were hardly a Gentleman in the West of Scotland, but he might be brought under the Acts of Parliament against Treason; and the Act of Indemnity which his Majesty designed for removing of all Fears and Jealousies, and the quieting the Minds of his good Subjects, should be rendered altogether elusory and ineffectual.

Mr. William Fletcher for the Pannel further adds, and conjoyns, that the Defences stand most relevant, notwithstanding of the Replies: For, 1<sup>mo</sup>. Whereas it was pretended, that the conversing and intercommuning with Daniel Crawford and the other Rebels, was flagrant Rebellion, and before any Course could be taken to declare or denounce them.

It is answered, 1<sup>mo</sup>. That the pretended Converse, being only a casual Rencontre on the High-way, it could not subject the Pannel to any Crime, but especially the highest Crime of Treason; and there is no Man in the World so innocent and loyal, who might not have fallen in the same Accident, considering the Number of the Rebels that were swarming in the Country. 2<sup>do</sup>. Any such Converse and Intercommuning being antecedent to the Act of Indemnity, the Pannel is thereby secured, in respect that Converse and Intercommuning is none of the Cases excepted in this Indemnity, and exceptio firmat regulam in non exceptis.

2<sup>do</sup>. Whereas it is replied, That the pretended Words do import a Counsel cum instructione, in regard they contain Motives and Reasons for returning to the Rebellion, viz. that they should not want Officers and Help. It is answered, That Law, in this Case of Counsel, requires more than Reasons and Arguments to persuade, viz. Directions how to commit the Crime, as in crimine furti, and what Place and House may be most easily broke, and what Instruments are most fit, which Species of Instructions are expressly cited in the forecited Paragraph of the Institutions.

3<sup>10</sup>. Whereas it is replied, That the Counsel takes the Nature of the Crime which is counselled; it is acknowledged that this holds true in the general, but still it must be such Counsel as is instructed, and in this Case it was impossible that the Pannel might have instructed the Rebels, both with proper Ways how to manage the Rebellion, and likewise with Arms and Horses.

4<sup>10</sup>. Where-

400. Whereas it is pretended, that the Indemnity is not simple, but contains Exceptions, and that albeit treasonable Expressions be indemnified in the general, yet the Indemnity cannot be extended to such treasonable Speeches as import a Counsel to Rebellion, that being a proper Accession to the Crime by which the Pannel becomes Art and Part thereof.

It is answered, 1<sup>mo</sup>. That verba legis, præsertim favorabilis, non sunt cavillanda; and it is impossible, without offering manifest Violence to the Propriety of Words, that the Expressions libelled should not be comprehended under the General of traiterous Speeches; and albeit treasonable Expressions may be distinguished into two Sorts, viz. 1<sup>mo</sup>. These which do only import a Counsel, Mandate or Command, to commit the Crime of Treason; yet it would be a very bad Rule in Dialectick, to say that these Words are not traiterous Speeches, because they are not of the first Kind of treasonable Speeches. 2<sup>do</sup>. If it be the Sense and Opinion of all Persons, who hear these Words repeated in this Libel, that the same are traiterous Speeches, then that Genus of treasonable Speeches must necessarily comprehend the same: But so it is, that the Pannel doth appeal to the Lords of Justiciary, and all who hear the Libel read, if that was not the Notion which they had of these Words, that the same are traiterous Speeches. And albeit his Majesty's Advocate and these who concur with him, may subtilize upon the Nicety of Words, and reduce them to another Class than these which are contained in the Indemnity, yet Words are to be understood ex populari, quem penes arbitrium est, & jus & norma loquendi, or otherwise Words should become Captions and Snares, and the People for whose Satisfaction the Proclamation of the Indemnity was made, should not be capable to understand the same; and it is not usus artis, but usus popularis which must be the Rule in this Case. 3<sup>mo</sup>. According to all the Rules of Interpretation, in Things which of their own Nature are not odious, the Words are to be taken according to all the Propriety of popular Use, v. g. an indefinite Speech should be taken for one that is universal, and the Indemnity is not only a Matter not odious, but most favourable, and therefore a proprietate verborum non est recedendum.

410. It is a strange Nicety and catching of Words, to pretend, that Words libelled should be pardoned, in so far as they are traiterous Speeches, and should not be pardoned in so far as they are a Counsel to Rebellion; for this were indeed to cleave an Hair, and it is noways suitable to that free and native Liberty which is inherent in such Acts, to run to metaphysical Niceties.

510. Whereas it is pretended, that the Pannel falls under the Exceptions of the Act of Indemnity in so far as an Heritor, and that it is clearly imported by the Words libelled, that he has contrived the Rebellion, and contributed thereto, by sending out Men to the same, and that the Accession arising from Counsel, imports as much against the Pannel, as if he had been actually in the Rebellion.

It is answered, 1<sup>mo</sup>. That the Act of Indemnity is opposed, which excepts only Heritors in three Cases distinctly express in the Act, viz. 1<sup>mo</sup>. Actual Rebellion arising from these Words, Heritors who were in the Rebellion. 2<sup>do</sup>. Contriving. 3<sup>mo</sup>. Contributing by Levies; and that Counsel and Intercommuning is not under any of these three Heads, for the Extent of the Rule cannot be better cleared and determined, than by the Nature of the Expression; and where Laws have Exceptions, nothing does so much illustrate and confirm the Rule, as appears from Novel. 7. Cap. 2. in initio, where these Words are to be found, necessarium existimavimus quasdam exceptiones dare legi, cum multis vigilis & subtilitate adinventas, ut eas habens in auxilio, lex nequaquam moveatur; and the Exception in some Case doth enlarge the Rule, and does fully clear the same, and makes it extend to Cases which otherwise would not be understood to be comprehended, as appears from Lex 12. Parag. 43. where the Case being stated, if when domus instructa, legata an contineatur vestis. The Lawier doth resolve, that it is doubtful in the general; but if there be an Exception added of aurum or argentum, that the domus instructa must necessarily comprehend vestis, nam qui hæc exceptit, non potest non videri de cæteris rebus, quæ mea essent, sensisse.

2<sup>do</sup>. The Words Contrivance and Plotting are synonymous Words, and are express in the Latin by ordinatio & tractatus, and according to the common Acception of the Words, these only are understood to have contrived and plotted a Rebellion, who have taken Measures, and laid down Ways how to carry on and maintain the same, they keeping Correspondence in order to that End, drawing what Number could be engaged, how they should be provided with Arms and the like, which can noways be inferred, as is pretended, from Words spoke on an High-way in a passing Discourse. Likeas, Plots and Contrivances of Rebellion are of their own Nature secret and latent Actions, which are done clam & occulto; and no rational Man will presume that the Pannel, who is known to be a Man most circumspect in his Words and Carriage, could have fallen into that Madness, as to have contrived a Rebellion with ignorant, silly and mean Persons (some whereof he did not know) in an open High-way: And 'tis hoped the Lords of Justiciary will in this Case consider the Person of the Pannel; and seeing the Words do not amount to a Contrivance, or plotting a Rebellion, rapienda est occasio quæ præbet benignius responsum; and albeit in a lax and improper Signification, these Words might import a Contrivance, yet the Pannel doubts not but the Lords will have regard to the proper Signification of the Words, seeing otherwise it is impossible to interpret the Indemnity with that Latitude which his Majesty hath expressly required.

Whereas it is pretended, that these Words do import a contributing to the Rebellion, by levying of Men or Money. It is answered, That levying of Men and Money is a physical Act, and not a moral Periwasion; and no Man will imagine that levying of Men and Money, can consist in Words, but the same doth necessarily import Deeds of drawing Men together, and taking of their Names in order to the forming them into an Army; if Words were levying of Men or Money, an Army would be very easily supplied.

As to the former Defence against the second Libel, viz. that it wants Month and Year, and there is not the least Answer made, and therefore there cannot be least Use made thereof.

And if any of the said Masters of Ships, or other Vessels foresaid, shall import to this Kingdom, any Traitors, Rebels, Fugitives, intercommuned or banished Persons, it is hereby declared, they shall be liable therefore, conform to the Laws and Acts of Parliament, and Proclamations made against Resettlers of Rebels; requiring also the Persons abovementioned, authorized to take the said Oath, to give an exact Account of their Diligence, the first Tuesday of every Month, to the Clerks of Our Privy Council: And We do hereby require and command the Collectors and Clerks of Our several Custom-offices, to accept of no Report inward, from any Master of a Ship, Bark, Boat, or other Vessel, and the Keepers of the Cocquet-office not to give out the same to any such Master outward bound, until he receive Testificate from the Persons abovementioned, authorized as said is, within whose Precinct any such Ship, Bark, Boat, or other Vessel is, that he has made Faith anent his Passengers, as aforesaid, and that he neither hath, had, nor has any other Passengers from Abroad, nor outward bound, than these mentioned in his Oath, as they will be answerable at their highest Peril. And further, declaring, that the Master and Owner shall lose the Ship, Boat, Bark, or Vessel and Goods, in which any Person, not given up as said is, shall be in-brought unto this Kingdom, or transported forth hereof; and that all Magistrates of Burghs of Royalty or Regality, and Heritors on whose Ground such Persons shall be landed, are to be liable and punished therefore, as Our Privy Council shall think fit, in case they do not Diligence to prevent the same, or apprehend the Persons so landed. Society People's Declaration, especially against Informers and Intelligencers, November 8. 1684. N<sup>o</sup>. XCIX.

Albeit we know that the People of God in all Ages, have been cruelly persecuted, and maliciously reviled by Apostates from, and Enemies to the Truths of our Lord Jesus Christ; yet such hard Usage, and virulent reproaching, hath not (at least ought not to have) abated the Zeal of tender hearted Christians, in the Prosecution of holy and commanded Duties. Therefore, as hitherto, (through Grace assisting) we have not been driven to lay aside necessary obliging Duties, because of the viperous Threatnings of Men, who are given up of an holy and wise God, to lay out all their Might and Power for promoting a Course of wicked Profanity by virulent Persecution, and ignominious Calumnies, (to all of whom nevertheless, that are reconcilable unto God, we heartily wish eternal Salvation) so we declare our firm Resolution of constant Adherence to our Covenant and Engagements, where we are bound to have common Friends and Foes with our covenanted Reformation, and to look upon what is done to one, as done to all of us; and also our unanimous Adherence to our faithful Declarations, wherein we have disowned the Authority of Charles Stuart, (not Authority as God's Institution, either among Christians or Heathens) and all Authority depending upon him, for Reasons given elsewhere; (disclaiming all such Things as infer a magistratical Relation betwixt him and us) and wherein also we have declared War against him, and his Accomplices, such as lay out themselves to promote his wicked and hellish Designs. Therefore, that therein our Mind may be the more clearly understood, and for preventing further Mistakes anent our Purposes, we do hereby joyntly and unanimously testify and declare, that as we utterly detest and abhor that hellish Principle of killing all who differ in Judgment and Perswasion from us, it having no Bottom upon the Word of God, or right Reason; so we look upon it as a Duty binding upon us, to publish openly unto the World, that forasmuch as, we are firmly and really purposed not to injure or offend any whomsoever, but to pursue the Ends of our Covenants, in standing to the Defence of our glorious Work of Reformation, and of our own Lives: Yet (we say) we do hereby declare unto all, that whosoever stretcheth forth their Hands against us, while we are maintaining the Cause and Interest of Christ against his Enemies, in the Defence of our covenanted Reformation, by shedding our Blood actually, either by authoritative commanding, such as bloody Counsellors (bloody we say) insinuating clearly by this, and the other adjective Epithets, an open Distinction, betwixt the cruel and blood-thirsty, and the more sober and moderate, especially that (so called) Justiciary, Generals of Forces, Adjutants, Captains, Lieutenants, and all in civil and military Power, who make it their Work to embue their Hands in our Blood, or by obeying such Commands, such as bloody Militia Men, malicious Troopers, Soldiers and Dragoons; likewise, such Gentlemen and Commons, who, through Wickedness and ill Will, ride and run with the foresaid Persons, to lay Search for us, or who deliver any of us into their Hands, to the spilling of our Blood, by inticing morally, or stirring up Enemies to the taking away of our Lives, such as designedly and purposely advise, counsel, and encourage them to proceed against us, to our utter Extirpation; by informing against us wickedly, wittingly, and willingly, such as viperous and malicious Bishops and Curates, and all such Sort of Intelligencers, who lay out themselves to the Effusion of our Blood, together with all such as, in obedience to the Enemies their Commands, at the Sight of us raise the Hue and the Cry after us; yea, and all such as compearing before the Adversaries their Courts, upon their Demands delate us, and any who befriend us to their and our extreme Hazard and Suffering. We say all, and every one of such shall be reputed by us, Enemies to God, and the covenanted Work of Reformation, and punished as such, according to our Power, and the Degree of their Offence; chiefly, if they shall continue after the Publication of this our Declaration, obstinately and habitually, with Malice to proceed against us, any of the foresaid ways, not at all excoiming from present Punishment, such as formerly have been chief Ringleaders and obstinate Offenders. Withal leaving Room for civil and ecclesiastick Satisfaction, before lawful and settled Judicatories, for the Offences of such Persons as our Power at this Time cannot reach, or the Degrees of whose Punishment, according to their Offences, is hard for us to be determined. Finally. We do hereby declare, that we abhor, condemn, and discharge any personal Attempts, upon any Pretext whatsoever, without previous Deliberation, common or competent Consent, with certain Probation by sufficient Witnesses, the guilty Person's Confession, or the Notourness of the Deeds themselves. Inhibiting also and discharging any of our Emisaries whatsoever, to stretch forth their Hands beyond the certainly known Degrees of any of the foresaid Persons their Offences.

Now let not any think, that (our God assisting us) we will be so slack-handed in Time coming, to put Matters in Execution, as heretofore we have been, seeing we are bound faithfully and valiantly to maintain our Covenants, and the Cause of Christ. Therefore, let all these foresaid Persons be admonished of their Hazard, and particularly all ye Intelligencers, who, by your voluntary Informations, endeavour to render us up into the Enemies their Hands, that our Blood may be shed; for by such Courses ye both endanger your immortal Souls, it Repentance prevent not, seeing God will make Inquisition for shedding the precious Blood of his Saints, whatever be the Thoughts of Men; and also your Bodies, seeing you render your selves actually and maliciously guilty of our Blood, whose Innocency the Lord knoweth. However, we are sorry at our very Hearts, that any of you should choose such Courses, either with bloody Deed to shed our Blood, or with the flattering Ziphites, to inform Persecutors where we are to be found. So we say again, we desire you to take Warning of the Hazard that ye incur, by following such Courses; for sinless Necessity for self Preservation, accompanied with holy Zeal for Christ's reigning in our Land, and suppressing of Profanity, will move us not to let you pass unpunished. Call to your Remembrance, all that is in Peril is not lost, and all that is delayed is not forgiven. Therefore, expect to be dealt with as ye deal with us, so far as our Power can reach, not because we are acted by a sinful Spirit of Revenge, for private and personal Injuries, but mainly because by our Fall Reformation suffers Damage; yea, the Exercise of Godliness through enflaming Flatteries, and terrible Threatning, will thereby be brought to a very low Ebb, the Consciences of many more dreadfully surrendered, and Profanity more established and propagated.

And as upon the one Hand we have here declared our Purpose against malicious Injurers of us, so upon the other Hand, we do hereby beseech, invite, and obtest all you who with well unto Zion, to shew your good Will toward us, by acting with us, and in your Places and Stations, according to your Ability, counselling, encouraging, and strengthening our Hands for this great Work, of holding up the Standard of our Lord Jesus Christ. Think not that in any ways ye are called to ly by neutral and indifferent, especially in such a Day; for we are a People by holy Covenants dedicated unto the Lord, in our Persons, Lives, Liberties, and Fortunes, for defending and promoting his glorious Work of reformation, notwithstanding all Opposition that is, or may be made thereunto; yea, and sworn against all Neutrality and Indifferency in the Lord's Matters. And moreover, we are fully perswaded, that the Lord, who now hideth his Face from the House of Jacob, will suddenly appear, and bring Light out of Darkness, and perfect Strength out of Weakness, and cause Judgment to return again to Righteousness.

Thus having declared our deliberate, lawful, and necessary Purposes concerning this Matter, in order to the Publication of the same, we do hereby statute and ordain, that upon the Eighth Day of November, Copies of this our Declaration, be affixed upon a sufficient and competent Number of the publick Market-crosses of the respective Burrows, and of the patent Doors of the respective Kirks within this Kingdom.

CHARLES, by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith: To Our Lyon King at Arms, and his Brethren, Heralds, Maces of Our Privy Council, Pursuivants, and Messengers at Arms, Our Sheriffs in that Part, conjunctly and severally, specially constitute, Greeting. Forasmuch as several insolent and desperate Rebels, having frequently refused the reiterated Offers of Our Clemency, have of late associated themselves, under a pretended Form of Government, in Societies, Fellowships, &c. and have, in their Meetings, at last pulled off the Mask under which they formerly endeavoured to disguise their bloody and execrable Principles, and openly and avowedly declared in a treasonable Paper, emitted by them, and affixt at several Parish-churches, (intituled, The apologetical Declaration and admonitory Vindication of the true Presbyterians of the Church of Scotland, especially against Intelligencers and Informers) that they have disowned Us and Our Authority, and have declared War against Us; and from that that do infer, that it is not only lawful, but a Duty upon them, to kill and murder all who do any manner of way serve Us, or bear Charge under Us, or who do assist Our Judicatures, or Forces in the Execution of Our Laws ( Principles inconsistent with all Government and Society, and tending to the Destruction of the Lives of Our loyal and honest Subjects ) Therefore We, with Advice of the Lords of Our Privy Council, do hereby ordain, that whosoever shall own the said most execrable and treasonable Declaration, or Assassinations therein mentioned, and the Principles therein specified, or whosoever shall refuse to disown the same, in so far as it declares a War against his sacred Majesty, and asserts that it is lawful to kill such as serve in Church, State, Army, or Country, shall be tried, and executed to the Death. And further, We hereby require and command all Our good Subjects, especially these dwelling in the Southern and western Shires of this Our ancient Kingdom, besouth the River of Tay, that they be ready, upon all Occasions, to concur with Our Magistrates and Officers, in seeking, searching and apprehending; and that they, and each of them do their utmost Endeavour, to seek, search, delate and apprehend any who shall own the said apologetical Declaration, and the treacherous and assassinating Principles therein mentioned, or refuse to disown the same, as said is; certifying them, if they fail herein, they shall be proceeded against, for their said Collusion and Connivance, with the utmost Severity of Our Laws: As also that, when they are required, they shall actually concur to keep and secure (as Prisoners) the said Rebels, when they are taken; and to search for, and drive away their Goods, when required by those commissioned by Us. And since these Rebels, after declaring their hellish Intentions, for the better Performance of their mischievous Designs, do lurk in secret, and are never discerned, but in the Acts of their horrid Assassinations, and passing up and down unknown amongst Our loyal Subjects, take Opportunity to murder and assassinate, and it being necessary to provide a Remedy against so imminent a Danger, which cannot be so well done, as when the good are discriminated from the bad by discriminating Signs; at least constant Inquiries may occasion a continual Trouble, even to Our good Subjects: Therefore, as a Remedy for these Inconveniencies, We declare it to be Our Royal Will and Pleasure, and We hereby command and require all Our Subjects, within this Our ancient Kingdom, both Men and Women, past the Age of Sixteen Years, not to presume to travel without Testificates of their Loyalty and good Principles, which they are to have in manner following. And We hereby command all Heritors, Liferenters and Wadsetters, and, in their Absence, their Factors and Chamberlains, to convocate all the Inhabitants upon their Lands, in every respective Parish, and to bring them before any of Our Privy Counsellors, or Our Commissioners appointed by Our Council, in the Shires and Bounds underwritten, viz. Lanerk, Renfrew, Air, Dumbarton Shire, Nithsdale, and Stewartry of Anandale, Wigton, and Stewartry of Kirkcudbright, Berwick, Selkirk, Fife, and Kinross, Mid, West, and East Lothians, and Bathgate, ( including Our City of Edinburgh, with the Suburbs and Liberties thereof, ) and Bounds betwixt Spey and Ness, ( including Strath-spey and Abernethy ) or any Three of them, or before the Sheriffs of the Shire, where there are no such Commission, to deliver them an exact List of the Names of all their Inhabitants; and the Master and all the Inhabitants, shall, in solemn Manner, in presence of the said Commissioners, take the following Oath, Viz.

I A. B. do hereby abhor, renounce and disown, in presence of the almighty God, the pretended Declaration of War, lately affixed at several Parish-churches, in so far as it declares a War against his sacred Majesty, and asserts, that it is lawful to kill such as serve his Majesty, in Church, State, Army, or Country.

And such as can subscribe, are to subscribe the same, on a large Sheet of Paper, for every Parish; and on Performance thereof, the said Commissioners are hereby ordained to deliver to every such Person, a Testificate of the Tenor following, Viz.

We A. B. &c. do, by these, testify and declare, that C. in the Parish of D. did compare before us, and on his, or her solemn Oath, before almighty God, did abjure and renounce the late traitorous apologetical Declaration, in so far as it declares, War against his Majesty, and asserts, that it is lawful to kill such as serve his Majesty in Church, State, Army, or Country.

Which Testificate we declare is to serve for a free Pass to all who have the same for all Time thereafter, and shall preserve them from all Molestation and Trouble in going about their Affairs; and if it shall happen any of the said Testificates to be lost by the Persons who receive the same, that they are to have them renewed by them who first granted them, and the Ministers of the respective Parishes; certifying hereby, all such who shall adventure to travel without a Testificate in Manner foresaid, that they shall be holden and used as Concurrers with the foresaid execrable Rebels, and as guilty of the foresaid treasonable Declaration, and accessory to the Designs therein. And to the effect this Our Will and Pleasure may be made known to all concerned We hereby require and command all Our Sheriffs, and Magistrates of Our Royal Burghs respectively, to cause intimate the same at all the Parish-churches within this Kingdom, upon the Lord's Day after divine Service, and that with all possible Diligence; and that the Heritors, Liferenters and Wadsetters in every Parish give in their foresaid Lists, before the regular incumbent Minister, and such a Person or Persons as shall be appointed by the Sheriff and Stewart of each Shire and Stewartry, within the Space of Fifteen Days after the said Intimation at the Parish-churches respectively; and in case it shall happen any to be absent from their Residences, at that Time, upon lawful Occasion, their Master shall take a competent Day to produce them, conform to the Distance of the Place; and all who are otherwise absent, and for whom their Masters will not engage in Manner foresaid, shall be considered as Fugitives, their Families seized on in order to their Transportation, and their Goods inventared and secured; and it is hereby declared, that the Master shall be answerable that none of the Goods of the said Persons be taken off the Ground until those employed by Us shall intromit with them; and if any of these who compare shall own the said traitorous Declaration, and the Principles and Practices therein asserted, or shall refuse to disown the same in manner above prescribed, the said Commissioners are hereby required instantly to secure and apprehend their Persons, and carry them to the next Burgh, Sheriff, Bailie of Regality, or any of Our Forces who are nearest; and any who shall receive them, are hereby required to carry them to the surest Prison next adjacent, there to be kept till Our Council be acquainted therewith, and give Order therein; and the Apprehenders are hereby empowered to call to their Assistance, such of Our Lieges as they shall think fit for executing of Our Commands; and if any shall refuse to concur, We declare they are to be holden as Concurrers with and Assistors of these Rebels; and that if any Heritor, Liferenter, or Wadsetter shall fail in doing as aforesaid, they shall be holden as guilty of the foresaid Crimes, and pursued and punished nished accordingly: And We do hereby strictly prohibit and discharge all Our Lieges whether to Burgh or Land, as well all other House-keepers, as Hostler-houses, Inn-keepers, and other Houses of common Refect, to harbour, lodge, or entertain any Person whatsoever, unless they have such Certificates as is above prescribed, under the Pain of being punished as Refecters of, and Intercommuners with Rebels. And for further Security and Prevention of Fraud, it is hereby required, that the Users and Havers of the foresaid Testificates shall be holden and obliged to swear, that these Testificates are true and unforged Testificates, and that they are the Persons mentioned and expressed in them, if the same shall be required of them. And finally, for the Encouragement of such as shall discover any of the said Traitors and Assassins, or any who have been any ways in Accession to the said traiterous and damnable Paper, or to the publishing and spreading of the same, as said is, or to have been a Member of the said pretended Societies and Fellowships, &c. We hereby declare and ensure to them, and every one of them, who shall discover any of these Assassins, or pretended Members, a Reward of the Sum of Five hundred Merks Scott, for each of them who shall be discovered, so as to be apprehended, and found guilty. And to the effect that all Our Lieges may have notice of Our Pleasure in the Premises, Our Will is, and We charge you strictly, and command, that incontinent, these Our Letters seen, ye pass to the Market-cross of Edinburgh, and remanent Market-crosses of the whole head Burghs of the Shires of this Kingdom, and there, in Our Name and Authority, by open Proclamation, make Publication of these Presents, that all Persons concerned may give exact and punctual Obedience thereunto, as they will be answerable at their highest Peril. And We ordain these Presents to be printed.

Right Honourable,

IT having pleased God this Day to call, to his eternal Rest, his late Majesty King Charles II. of ever blessed Memory, we are, by his now Majesty King James VII. (whom God long blefs and prosper) commanded to give you notice thereof, and to send you his Letter here inclosed, with a Proclamation to be published assoon as conveniently can be, after your first Meeting, of both which we send you the Copies under this Cover, and so need not trouble you with the Repetition of the Contents, not doubting but your Lordships will take special Care to see his Majesty's Royal Pleasure, therein mentioned, soon and effectually put in Execution. In the mean while we judge it our Duties, to put your Lordships in mind of proclaiming his said now Majesty King James VII. by the Grace of God, King of Scotland, England, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. with the Solemnities, and in the most proper Methods, on the like happy Occasions accustomed, with all possible Diligence after your Meeting, and before the publishing of the said Proclamation. And altho' we are in great Haste to dispatch this Packet, which is of so great Importance to his Majesty's Service, and the Well and Happiness of that his ancient Kingdom; yet we cannot but add, what we have further in Command from his Majesty, that in case there be any Embargo, by you, laid upon Ships from going to any Place beyond Sea, it is his Pleasure, that the same be now taken off, but nevertheless, that all possible Care be taken for searching all Ships that shall arrive in any Port of that Kingdom from beyond Sea, and that such Passengers, as shall come over, may be secured, and not set at Liberty until your Lordships shall be fully informed and satisfied, that they are guilty of no Crime against the Government, either in Church or State, as now established by Law in any of his Majesty's Dominions.

JAMES R:

JAMES VII. by the Grace of GOD, King of Scotland, England, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To all and sundry Our good Subjects, whom these Presents do, or may concern, Greeting: We taking into Our Royal Consideration, that notwithstanding the Prudence, Justice, and unparalleled Clemency, which did ever accompany the Government of Our most dear, and most entirely beloved Brother, King Charles II. of ever blessed Memory, several wicked and seditious Subjects, did break out into open Rebellions and Conspiracies, against his sacred Person and Government. And albeit, God did on all Occasions manifest his Wrath against them and their Enterprises, so as their Designs were defeated, and several of their Persons brought to condign and just Punishment, yet some few of them were either so malicious or foolish, as to be ensnared by others to persevere in their hellish Principles and Practices, both in Defiance of all Law and Justice, and in open Contempt of the reiterated Pardons, published and offered by his said late Majesty. And now Our Royal Prudence, and the Care of Our People obliging Us to take full Information of the chief Movers, and most active Instruments in these pernicious Commotions, before We determine Our Royal Pleasure concerning them, which We hope to attain in a very short Time; yet as a Demonstration of Our innate Clemency, (which also has shin'd in the whole Line of Our Royal Race) and of Our Resolution to imitate the glorious Example of our said dearest Royal Brother, We have resolved to pardon: Likeas, We do hereby pardon, indemnify, and forgive all Our Subjects in Our ancient Kingdom of Scotland, under, and below the Degree of Heritors, Liferenters, Wadsetters, Burgeses of Burghs Royal, and vagrant Preachers, of all Rebellions, Treasons, Seditions, Insurrections, Refet, Intercommuning, Fire-raising, Robberies, Slaughters, free Quarters, Leasing-making, concealing of Treason, and of all Crimes in general committed by them, or any one of them, by Word, Writ, or Deed, against Our Government and the Laws of Our Kingdom, in any Time preceeding the Date of this Our Royal Proclamation. Declaring hereby all and every one of them free and secure from all Punishments, or Trouble for the same, either in their Persons or Goods, in all Time coming. Excepting only as to such Fines, for which already Sentences are pronounced: And likewise excepting from this Our gracious Pardon, all those who are guilty of the Assassination of James late Archbishop of St. Andrews,

Pearson Minister at Carsfairn, Thomas Kennoway,

Kenmoway, and Duncan Stuart. And We do hereby declare Our Royal Will and Pleasure, that this Act of Indemnity and Pardon, shall be extended to all who are at present declared Fugitives, providing these Fugitives make Address within Twenty Days after the Publication hereof, to Our Privy Council, Our Justice-court, or any of Our Sheriffs in Our said Kingdom, testifying their Acceptance of this Our Pardon, by taking the Oath of Allegiance, or otherwise finding Caution to transport themselves out of Our Three Dominions of Scotland, England, and Ireland, before the Twentieth Day of May next, ensuing the Date of these Presents, and to live peaceably after the said Publication, until they shall transport themselves, and never to return to any Part or Place of Our said Dominions, without a Licence from Us, or Our Privy Council aforesaid, under Pain of Death. And We do command, that this Our Pardon and Indemnity be applied and understood in the most ample Sense and Meaning, whereof the Words are capable and that no Person included therein be troubled or molested, for any Cause aforesaid in Judgment, or outwith the same in any Time hereafter. And lastly, to the end all Our good Subjects may have Notice of this Our Royal Will and Pleasure, We do hereby command Our Lyon King at Arms, and his Brethren, Heralds, Mucers, Pursuivants, and Messengers at Arms, to make timeous Proclamation hereof, at the Market-cross of Edinburgh.

Reign the first Year.*

THe Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council ordain his Majesty's gracious Indemnity above-written, to be published at the Market-cross of Edinburgh, with the usual and accustomed Solemnities; and thereafter ordain the same to be printed, and published at the whole Market-crosses of the head Burghs of the Shires of this Kingdom, and other Places needful, by the several Sheriffs, and others concerned; and recommend to the Archbishops and Bishops, to cause their several Ministers read from the Pulpit on a Lord's Day, after divine Service, his Majesty's said gracious Indemnity, that all Persons concerned may have Notice of the same.

King's Letter to Parliament, Commissioner and Chancellor's Speech, with the Parliament's Answer, April 28. 1685. N<sup>o</sup>. CVI.

JAMES R.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

THE many Experiences We have had of the Loyalty and exemplary Forwardness of that Our ancient Kingdom, by their Representatives in Parliament, assembled in the Reign of Our dearest and most entirely beloved Brother, of ever blessed Memory, made Us desirous to call you at this Time, in the Beginning of Our Reign, to give you an Opportunity not only of shewing your Dury to Us in the same Manner, ner, but likewise of being exemplary to others, in your Demonstrations of Affection to Our Person, and Compliance with Our Desires, as you have most eminently been in Times past, to a Degree never to be forgotten by Us, nor ( We hope ) to be contradicted by your future Practices. That which We are at this Time to propose unto you, is, what is as necessary for your Safety, as Our Service, and what has a Tendency more to secure your own Privileges and Properties, than the aggrandizing Our Power and Authority, ( though in it consists the greatest Security of your Rights and Interests, these never having been in Danger, except when the Royal Power was brought too low to protect them ) which now We are resolved to maintain in its greatest Lustre, to the end We may be the more enabled to defend and protect your Religion, as established by Law, and your Rights and Properties ( which was Our Design in calling this Parliament ) against fanatical Contrivances, Murderers and Assassins, who, having no Fear of God more than Honour for Us, have brought you into such Difficulties, as only the Blessing of God upon the steady Resolutions and Actions of Our said dearest Royal Brother, and those employed by him, ( in prosecution of the good and wholesome Laws by you heretofore offered ) could have saved you from the most horrid Confusions, and inevitable Ruin. Nothing has been left unattempted by those wild and inhumane Traitors, for endeavouring to overturn your Peace; and therefore We have good Reason to hope, that nothing will be wanting in you to secure your selves and Us from their Outrages and Violence in Time coming, and to take Care that such Conspirators meet with their just Deservings, so as others may thereby be deterred from Courses so little agreeable to Religion, or their Duty and Allegiance to Us. These Things We considered to be of so great Importance to Our Royal as well as the universal Interest of that Our Kingdom, that We were fully resolved in Person to have proposed the needful Remedies to you; but Things having so fallen out, as render this impossible for Us, We have now thought fit to send Our right trusty and right entirely beloved Cousin and Counsellor, William Duke of Queensberry, to be Our Commissioner amongst you; of whose Abilities and Qualifications We have Reason to be fully satisfied, and of whose Faithfulness to Us, and Zeal for Our Interest, We have had signal Proofs, in the Times of Our greatest Difficulties: Him We have fully entrusted in all Things relating to Our Service, and your own Prosperity and Happiness; and therefore you are to give him entire Trust and Credit, as you now see We have done; from whole Prudence, and your most dutiful Affection to Us, We have full Confidence of your entire Compliance and Assistance, in all those Matters wherein he is instructed, as aforesaid. We do therefore not only recommend unto you, that such Things be done as are necessary in this Juncture, for your own Peace, and the Support of Our Royal Interest, both at Home and Abroad, but also that you do them so speedily, as may evidence to the World, that you are still in the same Manner addicted to the Royal Interest, of which We had so much Experience when amongst you, that We cannot doubt of your full and ample expressing the same on this Occasion, by which the great Concern We have in you Our ancient and kindly People, may still increase, and you may transmit your loyal Actions ( as Examples of Duty ) to your Posterity. In full Confidence whereof, We do assure you of Our Royal Favour and Protection, in all your Concerns; and so We bid you heartily Farewell.

Given at Our Court at Whitehall, the Twenty eighth Day of March, 1685. and of Our Reign the first Year.

By His Majesty's Command,

DRUMMOND:

The Speech of the Lord High Commissioner:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

His Majesty has been pleased, so fully and obligingly, by the Letter you have now heard, to intimate his Royal Pleasure to you, as what I am to say seems in a Manner superfluous, so I need not take up much of your Time, nor shall I do more than touch a few Things as briefly as is possible.

And in the first Place, my Lords, this being the Day of his Majesty's Coronation in Our neighbouring Kingdom, you see he is no sooner placed on the Throne of his Royal Ancestors, than he inclines to have your Advice in what may import the Good of his Service, and Subjects here; by which you ought not only to be convinced of the great Confidence his Majesty has in the Loyalty of this his ancient Kingdom, and their good Example to his other Dominions, but also how fully he makes good his Royal Word and Declaration, to follow ( in his Reign ) the Example of his late Majesty of ever glorious Memory, under whose Protection and Government we enjoyed so long Peace and Quiet; I say ( my Lords ) as by calling you so soon, his Majesty expresses great Confidence in you, and seems still mindful of the Zeal and Affection of the last Parliament, for the Rights and Prerogative of the Crown, so ( in a due Return ) it is not to be doubted, but you will upon this Occasion not only exceed what has been formerly done, but also comply with all that can be proposed for establishing his Majesty's Greatness and your own Security, and by this convince the World how sensible you are of the great Honour his Majesty has allowed you, of being the first Parliament of his Dominions to do so.

I am in the next Place to tell you, that his Majesty is very mindful of the Duty and Loyalty of this Kingdom to his late Majesty and himself, when he was here amongst us: And the better to compose the Minds of his faithful Subjects, I am allowed to assure you of his princely Resolutions to protect and maintain the Religion and Government of this Church as they are now established by Law, and that he will take the Persons and Concerns of the regular Clergy into his special Care and Protection; and in order thereunto, I am to give the Royal Assent to such Laws and Acts as can be reasonably proposed.

I am likewise to let you know, that his Majesty will concernedly maintain your just Rights and Properties according to the established Laws of this Kingdom, and will not allow of oppressive arbitrary Proceedings in Soldiers or others. And further his Majesty being sensible of the great Decay of our Trade, has warranted me in his Royal Name, to consent to such Laws as can reasonably be proposed for Recovery and Improvement thereof.

And, my Lords, to conclude what I am to say on this Subject, his Majesty is so concerned in the Encouragement, Welfare and Prosperity of this his ancient Kingdom, as he will not only do what can justly be desired or expected for these Ends, but even in Business of the Exchequer and Militia (his immediate Concerns) I am warranted to go the greatest Lengths for your Ease and Conveniency, that the Nature of these can bear, and his Majesty's Service and your own Security will allow.

And, my Lords, his Majesty having in all Things so evidently discovered his gracious Inclinations for the Good of this Kingdom, and given us the fullest Assurances of his Favour and Protection that our Hearts can desire, what suitable Returns and Acknowledgments can we make to so excellent and incomparable a Prince, who, in all Things relating to our Quiet and Prosperity, prevents our very Desires? so if during his Reign (which I pray God to make long and glorious) we be not the happiest People in the World, we have only our selves to blame.

And now the King having so fully done his Part, it concerns you in the next Place to mind yours; and in order thereunto, I make no doubt but you will assert the Rights and Prerogatives of the Crown, and establish the Revenue as amply upon his Majesty and his lawful Successors, as it was enjoyed by the late King, or any of his Royal Predecessors, since you cannot (in the least) doubt but his royal Care for your Repose and Security, will rather exceed than fall short of any of his Ancestors. But to use any further Arguments to incite you to what is so much your Duty and Interest, were at the same Time to question your Loyalty and Zeal for his Majesty's Service, and your Concern for the Interest and Honour of your native Country, whose Representatives you are, so I shall not injure you, nor lessen your Thanks, by saying more upon this Subject.

My Lords, his Majesty certainly expects from the Prudence and Loyalty of this Parliament, that effectual Ways will be fallen upon for destroying that desperate fanatical and irreclaimable Party, who have brought us to the Brink of Ruin and Disgrace, and are no more Rebels against the King, than Enemies of Mankind, Wretches of such monstrous Principles and Practices, as past Ages never heard, nor those to come will hardly believe: What Indemnities and Acts of Grace and Clemency have they not contemned? And all the Use they made of them, has still been to harden and confirm them in their execrable Villanies; and how inconsiderable soever they appear, assure your selves they ought not absolutely to be contemned, for if they had not Support and Correspondence not yet discovered, it is not to be supposed they could have so long escaped the Care and Vigilance of the Government: It therefore concerns you both in Honour and Prudence, no longer to dally with them, but that the utmost Severities be most effectually applied, and always taken, both to find out their Favourers, and retired and secret Haunts.

My Lords, I doubt not but all of you sufficiently know that some of our Nation are deeply involved in the late horrid Conspiracy, who (and some others for other treasonable Crimes and Practices) are to be proceeded against before this Parliament; the Evidence of their Guilt I shall leave to its proper Place and Time, and do not doubt but his Majesty's Advocate will manage that weighty Matter with suitable Care and Faithfulness: So all I shall further say upon this Subject at present, is, that if Almighty God (who watches over the Security of Princes) had not miraculously discovered and disappointed those the most hellish and barbarous Designs that were ever contrived, in Place of that Peace, Happiness and Tranquillity which we now enjoy, these Kingdoms had certainly been at this Day a Sea of Blood, and in all imaginable Miserie and Desolation; which (being evident beyond Denial) will certainly provoke your and all good Mens Indignation and Resentment against those who can be reached, not only as Advisers and Contrivers of such Villanies, but Concealers of them: And since our Honour and Security every way seems absolutely bound up in the Life of his sacred Majesty, ought we not most cheerfully to grant what the Exigencies of his mild and gentle Government requires? especially seeing what we give is still bestowed upon our selves, and for maintaining us in our just Rights and Possessions, against the most cruel and barbarous Designs of his and our Enemies.

And now, my Lords and Gentlemen, in the last Place touching my self I shall not say much, my Unfitness for this eminent Station is possibly more obvious to me, than to any of you; however since his Majesty has been graciously pleased to place me in it, I am resolved to serve him boldly and firmly, and thereby labour to make up my other great Defects: And as this has still been my Practice in the other great Trusts I have the Honour to carry under his Majesty, so I know his Goodness will always accept the sincere Endeavours of his Servants in place of greater Performances.

The Lord high Chancellor's Speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

After what my Lord Commissioner hath so well represented to you, it will be very little necessary for me to say much.

I shall only take the Liberty to put you in mind, (of what I believe you are very sensible already) of the many Obligations this Nation lies under to be grateful to our great Monarch.

When by the Command of the late King, his Majesty, who now reigns, came first hither, what Disorders, Divisions, and Animosities found he amongst us? To bring the State of Things into your Prospect as it was then, could not be very grateful to you, nor pleasing to me, but we all remember with Joy how well he left us, and by what easy gentle Ways he brought about the Establishment of that Unity, which we were beginning to despair of.

Since that Time, how much we have been in his particular Care, during the happy Reign of that excellent Prince his Brother, of ever blessed and glorious Memory, is known to all the World.

But

But of all the Instances of his Majesty's Care for us, his Favour towards us, and his good Opinion of us, this of his calling us together in the very Beginning of his Reign, (which God grant may be long and prosperous) that we might have the Opportunity of presenting him with the first Fruits of the Service of his Parliaments, and of becoming Examples to his other Dominions, is the greatest, and what we should prize the most, improving it as far as it will go.

When we consider what strange Turns the extravagant Follies of some, and the malicious devilish Contrivances of others among us have taken, since the last Meeting of Parliament, what Convulsions have attacked the Body of this Nation, and how vile a Ferment has raged in it, to have our Advice called for by our Prince, now to provide proper Remedies for it, is the greatest Honour could be put upon us.

That we may do what in Duty we are bound in Return, let us lay aside all private Aims and Ends; for how can we hope to serve his Majesty, or promote the Interest of the Nation, while our Eye is directed only towards our own Particular? and let us with the Frankness and Cheertulness of honest SCOTSMEN, use all possible Means for uniting of the Nation, and the driving from amongst us, whoever will not joyn with us upon such Terms, as may conduce to the Advancement of the Honour and Interest of our King and his Crown, and the Well-being of this our native Country, which we should not suffer to be defiled and rendered contemptible to the whole World, by entertaining so venomous a bastardly Brood of villanous Men, as have of late, to the Reproach of Scotland, and of human Nature it self, maintained Principles, and ventured upon Practices not to be named amongst any who have ever heard of a Government, much less of Religion.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

You all know what a Conspiracy hath been entred into by ill Men of both Kingdoms, against the sacred Lives of the late King and his present Majesty; and who but incarnate Devils could think of attempting any thing against such precious Lives? For what Prince in Europe, or the whole World, was ever like the late King, except his glorious Brother who now reigns? and to have cut off any of them, had been barbarous to a Degree of making us appear more abominable than any People ever were, but for us to have lost both, had been our utter Ruin. Yet against both was the Design laid, and had succeeded, if that watchful Providence, which hath often preserved the two Royal Brothers in so many Difficulties, had not defeated the Success, by an unforeseen Accident, and had it succeeded, what Confusion, what Cruelty, what Blood, what inexpressible Misery had overflowed these Kingdoms?

But besides this, we have a new Sett sprung up amongst us from the Dunghil, the very Dregs of the People, who kill by pretended Inspiration, and instead of the Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord, have nothing in their Mouths but the Word of God, wresting that blessed Conveyance of his holy Will to us, to justify a Practice suggested to them, by him who was a Murderer from the Beginning, who having modelled themselves into a Common-wealth, (whose Idol is that accursed Paper the Covenant, and whose only Rule is to have none at all) have proceeded to declare themselves no longer his Majesty's Subjects, to forfeit all of us who have the Honour to serve him in any considerable Station, and will be sure ere long to do so by this great and honourable Court. It is how to rid our selves of these Men, and of all who incline to their Principles, that we are to offer to his Majesty, our Advice, Concurrence, and utmost Assistance. These Masters bring a publick Reproach upon the Nation in the Eyes of all our Neighbours abroad, while in their Gazetts we are mentioned as acting the vilest Assassinations and the horrid Villanies, they render us unquiet and unsecure at home, they bring Reproach upon our Religion, and are our great Plague.

Let us for the sake of our Allegiance, for his Majesty's Honour, for our Reputation abroad, for the Vindication of our Religion, and for our own Peace and Tranquillity, make haste to get our selves cured of it.

If this were once effectuated, we might yet hope for Quiet, and in order to the making our Quiet the more comfortable to us, when once we are come to a Resolution about what relates to the publick Peace, and to the Respect we owe to his Majesty, we may have Occasion of considering what Laws may be necessary towards the facilitating the Well-governing of our selves and native Country, both as to the regulating our Carriage one towards another, and the securing our Estates, from any thing that may be uneasy, from the Distribution of Justice between Man and Man, as to the improving of our Trade and Commerce abroad, and encouraging Industry and Frugality at home; for in all these Things his Majesty's Care will not fail us. And my Lord Commissioner, amongst his many other Advantages, is so well known to be a Lover of his Country, that we need not fear, but that he will give his Concurrence in what he is allowed so freely to consent to.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

To encourage us to do all we can towards the Service and the Honour of our glorious Monarch, let us consider him in all his personal Advantages; whether in what relates to War or Peace, where has the World afforded such another? One whose natural Endowments have been improved by his great Experience, at home and abroad, in Armies and Courts, by the greatest Trials of the most differing Kinds, those of Prosperity and Success, and of Adversity and Opposition, of Hazards and Toil, and of Authority and Command. Did ever Man shew so exact an Honesty, in the strictest adhering to his Word, such Temperance and Sobriety, so indefatigable a Diligence in Affairs, so undaunted a Courage upon all Occasions, and so unwearied a Clemency towards the most obstinate malicious Offenders? Did ever Heroe complete the Character so fully, in overcoming bravely, and shewing Gentleness to the vanquished? And I must say, the Triumphs of his Patience are not his obscurest Glories; nor is the forgiving of those whose virulent Tongues would have tainted his Fame, if their Malice could have reached it, what is least to be admired in him; what Reputation other Princes have laboured for, at the vast Extent of Blood and Treasure, and the the putting of a constant Constraint upon themselves, sits so easy upon him, that what they would have, he forces from the Consciences of his very Enemies by his Merit, and it costs him no more than to be himself. But this Theme is not for me, I do him Wrong, and while it may be, at this very Moment, he is receiving the Acclamations of his good Subjects, in the chief City of our neighbour Nation, at the great Solemnity of his Coronation there, I am detracting from him here, by giving him too low a Character. I shall only add, that he gave to Subjects the greatest Example of Loyalty and Obedience while he was one himself; and now he is an Example to all Kings in his Love, his Clemency, and Care towards his People. Let us give him the Return of our Love, our Fidelity, and our Obedience. And seeing he takes Pleasure in nothing so much, as in our Felicity and Prosperity, let it be an additional Tie upon us to advance his Honour and Greatness, by all the Endeavours of our Lives, without Reserve, and with our whole Fortunes, which under his Protection we may (if we please) so peaceably and comfortably enjoy.

The Parliament's Answer to his Majesty's Letter.

May it please your sacred Majesty,

Your Majesty's gracious and kind Remembrance of the Services done by this your ancient Kingdom, to the late King your Brother of ever glorious Memory, shall rather raise in us ardent Desires to exceed whatever we have done formerly, than make us consider them as deserving the Esteem your Majesty is pleased to express of them, in your Letter to us, dated the 28 of March. The Death of that our excellent Monarch is lamented by us to all the Degrees of Grief, that are consistent with our great Joy for the Succession of your sacred Majesty, who has not only continued, but secured the Happiness which his Wisdom, his Justice and Clemency procured to Us; and having the Honour to be first Parliament which meets by your Royal Authority, of which we are very sensible, your Majesty may be confident that we will offer such Laws as may best secure your Majesty's sacred Person, the Royal Family and Government, and be so exemplarily loyal, as to raise your Honour and Greatness to the utmost of our Power, which we shall ever esteem both Our Duty and Interest. Nor shall we leave any Thing undone for extirpating all Fanaticism, but especially those fatal Murderers and Assassines, and for detecting and punishing the late Conspirators, whose pernicious and execrable Designs did so much tend to subvert your Majesty's Government, and ruin us and all your Majesty's faithful Subjects. We can assure your Majesty, that the Subjects of this your Majesty's ancient Kingdom, are so desirous to exceed all their Predecessors, in extraordinary Marks of Affection and Obedience to your Majesty, that (God be praised) the only Way to be popular with us, is to be eminently loyal. Your Majesty's Care of us when you took us to be your special Charge, your Wisdom in extinguishing the Seeds of Rebellion and Faction amongst us, your Justice, which was so great, as to be for ever exemplary; but above all, your Majesty's free and cheerful securing to us our Religion, when you were the late King your Royal Brother's Commissioner, now again renewed when you are our Sovereign, are what your Subjects here can never forget. And therefore your Majesty may expect that we will think your Commands sacred as your Person, and that your Inclination will prevent our Debates. Nor did ever any who represented our Monarchs, as their Commissioners, (except your Royal self) meet with greater Respect, or more exact Observance from a Parliament, than the Duke of Queensberry (whom your Majesty has so wisely chosen to represent you in this; and of whose eminent Loyalty, and great Abilities in all his former Employments, this Nation hath seen so many Proofs) shall find from,

May it please your sacred Majesty,

Your Majesty's most humble, most faithful,

and most obedient Subjects and Servants,

The Estates of Parliament, now convened by his Majesty's sovereign Authority, taking into their Consideration, how this Nation hath now continued upwards of Two thousand Years, in the unaltered Form of our monarchical Government, under the uninterrupted Line of One hundred and eleven Kings, whose sacred Authority and Power hath been, upon all signal Occasions, so owned and assisted by almighty God, that our Kingdom hath been protected from Conquest, our Possessions defended from Strangers, our civil Commotions brought into wished Events, our Laws vigorously executed, our Properties legally fixed, and our Lives securely preserved; so that we and our Ancestors have enjoyed those Securities and Tranquillities, which the greater and more flourishing Kingdoms have frequently wanted. Those great Blessings we owe in the first Place to divine Mercy, and in Dependence on that, to the sacred Race of our glorious Kings, and to the solid, absolute Authority wherewith they were invested, by the first and fundamental Law of our Monarchy; nor can either our Records, or our Experience instance our being deprived of those happy Effects, but when a rebellious Party did, by Commotions and Seditions, invade the King's sovereign Authority, which was the Cause of our Prosperity; yet so far hath our primitive Conditution, and fundamental Laws prevailed against the Innovations and Seditions of turbulent Men, as that these Interruptions never terminated, but either in the Ruin, or at least the Suppression of these who at any Time did rebel, or rise in Opposition to our Government. And since so many Ages have assured to us the great Advantages, which flow down to all Ranks of People from the happy Constitution of our Monarchy, and that all our Calamities have ever arisen from seditious Invasions, upon those sacred Rights; therefore the Estates of Parliament for themselves, and in Name of the whole Kingdom, judge themselves obliged to declare, and they do declare to the World, that they abhor and detest, not only the Authors and Actors of all preceding Rebellions against the Sovereign, but likewise all Principles and Positions which are contrary, or derogatory to the King's sacred, supreme, sovereign, absolute Power and Authority, which none, whether Persons, or collective Bodies, can participate of, any manner of way, or upon any Pretext, but in Dependence on him, and by Commission from him. And as their Duty formerly did bind them to own, and assert the just and legal Succession of the sacred Line, as unalterable by any human Jurisdiction; so now on this Occasion, they for themselves and the whole Nation represented by them, in most humble and dutiful Manner, do renew the hearty and sincere Offer of their Lives and Fortunes, to assert, support, defend, and maintain King James VII. their present glorious Monarch, and his Heirs and lawful Successors in the Possession of their Crowns, Sovereignty, Prerogatives, Authority, Dignity, Rights and Possessions against all Mortals, and therewithal to assure all his Enemies, who shall adventure on the Disloyalty of disobeying his Laws, or on the Impiety of invading his Rights, that these shall sooner weary of their Wickedness, than they of their Duty, and that they firmly resolve to give their intire Obedience to his Majesty without Reserve, against all his Enemies, foreign or intestine; and they solemnly declare, that as they are bound by Law, so they are voluntarily and firmly resolved, that all of this Nation, betwixt sixty and sixteen, armed and provided, according to their Abilities, shall be in Readiness for his Majesty's Service, where, and as oft as it shall be his Royal Pleasure to require them.

And since the Excise of inland and foreign Commodities, granted to King Charles II. of ever blessed Memory, by the Fourteenth Act of the Parliament 1661. during all the Days of his Lifetime, and prorogate by the Eighth Act of the Parliament 1681. for Five Years thereafter, will shortly terminate; and the Estates of Parliament considering the Usefulness of this Grant, to support the Interest of the Crown, do, as the first Evidence of their Sincerity, in the foresaid Tender of their Duty, humbly and unanimously offer to his most sacred Majesty, King James VII. their present Monarch, and to his lawful Heirs and Successors in the imperial Crown of Scotland, the said Excise of inland and foreign Commodities, express in the said Fourteenth Act of Parliament 1661. to be collected in the Manner prescribed by the said Eighth Act of the Parliament 1681. for ever; and his Majesty and Estates of Parliament, by force of this Act, have united, annexed, and incorporated, and unite, annex and incorporate the same to the Crown of this Realm, to remain therewith in annexed Property, in all Time coming: And in respect that the Alteration in the Method of collecting the inland Excise, from what it was by the Act 1661. to that prescribed by the Eighth Act of Parliament 1681. will require some Time to establish it in Collection; therefore his Majesty, with Consent of the Estates, continues the Collection prescribed by the Fourteenth Act, Parliament 1661. of the inland Excise for Three Months, from the first of May next allenarly.

N<sup>o</sup>. CVIII.

JAMES, by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith: To Our Lyon King at Arms, and his Brethren, Heralds, Macers of Our Privy Council, Purservants, and Messengers at Arms, Our Sheriffs in that Part, conjunctly and severally, specially constitute, Greeting. Forasmuch as these traiterous Conspirators, who designed the horrid and sacrilegious Murder of Our dearest Brother, the late King, of renowned and eternal Memory, and the Destruction of Our ancient Monarchy, continuing still in the same hellish Project and Fury against Us, and Our Royal Government, are now again setting their Designs on Work, to raise Commotions in this Our ancient Kingdom, as being the last Strugglings of them and their execrable Party, and the utmost Effects of their absolute Despair; for preventing whereof, and bringing these desperate and execrable Traitors to just and condign Punishment, We, with Advice of Our Privy Council, do hereby strictly require and command, all and every of the Subjects of this Our Realm, that they be in a Readiness, in their best Arms, to concur and assist Us against any the foresaid Commotions, or Insurrections, as they shall be advertised; and particularly, We hereby require and command all and every the Colonels of Our Militia Regiments of Foot, and Captains of Horse, and the inferior Officers and Soldiers under their Command, in the Shires respective underwritten, viz. the Merse, Teviotdale, Peebles, Selkirk, East, Mid and West Lothians, Town of Edinburgh, Stirling Shire, Fife and Kinross Shires, the Four Companies of the low Country, of the Earl of Perth Our Chancellor's Regiment, and the Three Companies of the low Country, of the Marquis of Athole Lord Privy Seal his Regiment, the Sheriffs of Forfar and Kincardin, and all the Heritors, Literenters, Feuars and Wadsetters in the Shires of Air, Renfrew, Clidisdale, Wigton, Dumfries, and Stewartries and Bailiaries within the same, to be in Readiness with Fourteen Day Provision, to march when, and whither Our Privy Council shall give them Orders, and, to that end, to have their Arms fixed, and their several Companies of Our Militia presently mustered, and the Heritors and others aforesaid, listed, modelled in Companies, and mustered for the putting them in a Condition of a greater Readiness. And further, We hereby require and command all Persons, fencible Men, betwixt Sixty and Sixteen, within the Shires of Aberdeen, Bamff, Elgin, Nairn, Inverness, Ross, Sutherland and Cathness, to be in Readiness in Manner foresaid. As likewise, We hereby require and command all Our Lieges on the Sea-coasts of this Kingdom, or near to them, or to any of the Islands thereunto belonging, ing, so soon as they hear, or get Notice of any Vessels arriving at any Place from abroad, or at home into any Coasts, Ports, Creeks, or Harbours, with Men, Arms, or Ammunition, forthwith to convocate, and rise in their best Arms, and to beat them off, or seize upon, and secure the Ships or Vessels, and the Men, Arms and Ammunition, and give immediate Advertisment to Our Privy Council: And for their Security in obeying these Our Royal Commands, We he hereby fully pardon and indemnify them for ever, of all Slaughter, Blood, Mutilation, Fire-raising, burning of Ships, or such like warlike Inconveniencies as may follow, in case they meet with hostile Opposition. And We hereby require and command all Our Collectors, Customers, or Waiters, to make strict and diligent Search and Inquiry in all Ships arriving in any Part of this Kingdom, for Traitors, Rebels, Fugitives, or disaffected Persons, and for Arms and Ammunition, and to seize upon the Ships, Men, Arms and Ammunition, until they acquaint Our Privy Council, and receive their Directions thereanent: And to the effect they may the better be able to perform this Service, We do require all Our Subjects nearest to them, as they shall be by them advertised, to rise, concur with, fortify, and assist them, who, and these so assisting, are hereby declared to be fully indemnified in Manner foresaid, And that all the Persons aforesaid may know their Hazard, if they fail in any of the Premises, We hereby declare, that they shall not only incur Our high Displeasure, but also shall be punished with the utmost Severity, conform to their Demerit, and the Laws and Practice of this Kingdom, and that the Heritors, which shall be deficient in sending out their Tenants, and other fencible Men, or shall not give Advertisment, as said is, and of any Rebels and Traitors appearing on their Lands, that they shall be punished accordingly. And to the end the said desperate Traitors and Rebels may have no Refect, Harbour, Comfort, or Refuge from any of the Subjects of this Our Realm, We hereby strictly prohibit and discharge all and every of Our Subjects therein, to furnish House, Meat, Drink, or any other Thing comfortable to them, or to keep Intelligence or Correspondence with them, by Word, Writ, or Message, or to transport them to, or from Ferries, or any ways to be aiding, abetting, or assisting to them, under the Pain of being reputed and esteemed Art and Part with them in all their wicked Deeds and Practices, and proceeded against, as do meaned and punished accordingly. And that Our Pleasure in the Premises may be fully known to all Our Lieges, Our Will is, and We charge you strictly, and command, that incontinent, these Our Letters seen, ye pass to the Market-crofs of Edinburgh, and all the other Market-croffes of the head Burghs of the Shires of this Kingdom (and all Places else needful) and there, by open Proclamation, in Our Name and Authority, make Publication of Our Royal Will and Pleasure in the Premises, that none pretend Ignorance.

Given under Our Signet, at Holy-rood-house the Twenty eighth Day of April, One thousand six hundred and eighty five, and of Our Reign the first Year.

Act for the Test, May 13. 1685. N<sup>o</sup>. CIX.

Our sovereign Lord, with Consent of the Estates of Parliament, statutes and ordains, that all Protestant Heritors, Liferenters, and others having Right to Liferents jure mariti, Wadsetters, Tacksmen having Tacks for longer Time than for Eighteen Years, all Masters of Ships, and such other Burghesses, and Inhabitants of Burghs, whether of Royalty, Regality, or Barony, as are not Heritors, who shall be appointed by the Privy Council, take the Test prescribed by the sixth Act of the Parliament, 1681. before the first Day of November, for all such as live besouth the River of Tay, and the first Day of January next, for all benorth Tay; and for that end, that all Noblemen, and their eldest Sons, above the Age of Eighteen Years, shall compare before his Majesty's Privy Council; all Masters of Ships, and Burghesses aforesaid, before the Sheriff of the Shire where they live, at some Time before the said Day, and there shall swear and subscribe the said Test, before the Judge, and Clerk of the Court, with Certification, that such as fail in swearing and subscribing the Test, as said is, shall be punished in such pecunial Sums, as the secret Council shall determine, to be disposed of by his Majesty, at his Royal Pleasure. It is always declared, that this Act extends not to Women; and all Clerks are hereby ordained to send in Lists of such as have taken the Test, within their respective Jurisdictions, to the Clerks of his Majesty's Privy Council, before the first Day of February next to come, under the Pain of losing their Office, and to be punished otherwise as the Privy Council shall determine: But such as have already sworn and subscribed, shall not be obliged to renew it on this Occasion. And further, his Majesty, with Consent foresaid, doth ratify and approve what is already done in offering the Test by his Majesty's Privy Council, Justice-court, or any commissionate from any of them, or by Sheriffs and other Magistrates, declaring the same to have been good Service to the King and Country.

Our sovereign Lord considering the many Advantages which his Lieges might have had, if the Justices of Peace had exercised their Function, with that Diligence which the Law required, and the many Evils, especially in ecclesiastick Disorders and Irregularities, which might have been prevented by their Care: For Remedie whereof, in Time to come, his Majesty, with the Consent of his Estates in Parliament, doth hereby ratify, approve, and confirm the Eighth Act of the Parliament 1617. Intituled, Act anent the Justices for keeping of the King's Peace, and Constables, the Twenty fifth Act of the Parliament 1633. and the Thirty eighth Act of the Parliament 1661. Intituled, Commissions and Instructions to the Justices of Peace and Constables, in the whole Heads, Articles, and Clauses contained in them. And further, his Majesty gives full Power, Authority, and Commission to the said Justices, to put the Laws in Execution against all who shall be guilty of Conventicles, irregular Baptisms and Marriages, withdrawing from Church Ordinances, and other such Disorders, in so far as they are not capital, conform to the Laws made thereanent; and where the Crime is capital, they are to secure the Persons, and acquaint the Sheriff, or other Judge ordinary thereof: And it is declared, that in their Proceedings against Church-irregularities, Baptisms, Marriages and Conventicles, the Justices may proceed immediately without waiting any Time after the Crimes are committed; and their Clerk is appointed to send Information of their Proceedings once in the Quarter, to the Clerks of the Court, as they will be answerable. And for their further Encouragement, his Majesty allows unto the said Justices of Peace, the Fines of all, except Heritors, which shall arise from these Delinquencies judged by them, to be employed for explicating of their Jurisdiction, as they shall think fit, and for discovering of what the Fines of Heritors shall amount to. The Clerks of these Courts are hereby appointed to send a subscribed List of them to the Clerks of Exchequer, in the first Week of November yearly, under the Pain of Deprivation. And his Majesty, with Advice foresaid, allows the Justices to nominate their own Clerks at their first Meeting. Attour, his Majesty and Estates foresaid, give full Power, Authority and Commission, to the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, upon the Decease of any of the Justices of Peace, to nominate others in their Place, and to set down and impose Penalties upon such of the Justices as shall not keep and observe the Diets prefixed for their several and particular Meetings, according to former Acts, and an Act made in this Parliament. And with Power likewise to the said Lords of Privy Council, to enlarge and amplify the Power and Authority of the said Justices of Peace, if they shall find it necessary and expedient: And what the Council shall decree and determine thereanent, find and declare, that the same shall have the Force, Strength and Power of an Act of Parliament. It is always declared, that Sheriffs, Stewarts, and Bailies of Bailiaries, Regalities and Baronies, are to remain in the Possession and Exercise of their former Rights, according to the Laws of the Kingdom; any Thing in this Act notwithstanding.

Our sovereign Lord, with Advice and Consent of the Estates convened in Parliament, does statute and ordain, that all Masters, whether Heritors, Liferenters, proper Wadsetters, Tutors, Tacksmen, Donators of Wards or Liferents, shall in all Time coming, insert in all Tacks to be set by them to their Tenants, as well in Burgh as Landward, an express Clause, whereby the Tenant shall oblige himself, that he, his Family, Cottars and Servants, shall live peaceably and regularly, free of all fanatical Disorders, under the Pain of the Tenant, Cottar, or Servant contravening, their losing the Half of their Moveables respective, each for their own Fault; and where there is no written Tack, that all the Tenants shall enact themselves in the Masters Court-book, or in the Town Court-books within Burgh, or give Bond to that effect, and in the Tenor foresaid. Which Enrolment of Court is to be subscribed by the Tenant, or if he cannot write, by the Clerk of the Court in his Name; and if the Master, or any of the Persons foresaid shall fail herein, they shall pay a Year's Rent of the Lands set otherwise, a Third Part whereof to the Discoverer, if he prove the same, and Two Parts to the King's Majesty: And all Masters and others foresaid, who have Lands already set in Tack, without the said Clauses, are hereby ordained to renew the same, and insert the said Clauses in them, betwixt and Whitsunday, One thousand six hundred eighty and six, or to take an Obligation apart from the Tenant, bearing these Clauses, otherwise to remove summarily such Tenants as refuse to accept them on the said Conditions, notwithstanding of any former Tacks, which in this Case are hereby declared void and null; and in case the Tenants will not immediately remove, that the Master may commit them to Prison. And it is hereby statute and ordained, that if any Tenant shall refuse to renew his Tack, enact himself, or give Bond in the Terms foresaid, he shall be liable to pay to his Master a Year's Rent of the Lands set to him. And this but Prejudice or Derogation to all former Acts of Parliament, whereby Masters are obliged for their Tenants, in the Manner therein specified.

Declaration of the Earl of Argyle, with the Noblemen, Gentlemen, &c. 1685.

They must be altogether Strangers, or very little concerned in the Christian World, who (after all that the Nations and Churches about have seen, of the Lord's mighty Hand and stretched out Arm, in the late Wars betwixt King Charles I. and his People and Parliaments of Scotland, England and Ireland, against the then Conspirings of Popery and Tyranny, to the Ruin of true Religion and Liberty, the wonderful Advancement of the Gospel and Kingdom of our Lord Jesus within these Kingdoms, that thereupon ensued, with the general Refreshment, Joy and Security of all the Protestant Churches abroad, that thence redounded, and the no less rooted and firm Loyalty of the same People, who, notwithstanding their long, bloody and fatal Contendings with the Father, did yet, upon reasonable, fair and just Treaties concluded with all the Assurance that either Religion, Honour, or Gratitude could promise, call back and re-clude Charles II. his Son, to his Throne and Empire) are not fully convinced and satisfied, that, considering the perpetual Contradictings and Counteractings of all these sacred and solemn Engagements, that immediately, and ever since have been practised, the whole Reign of the aforesaid Charles II. (through the sinister and subtil Influences of a wicked and Popish Party, now manifestly discovered) was a constant and uniform Course of Perjury, Apostacy and Violence, begun with open Rebellion against God, the resolving not only of particular Laws, but by an unparalleled, most unpolitick and pernicious Device of whole un-exceptionable Parliaments, for the Space of Twenty seven Years preceeding, notwithstanding both our Religion and Liberties were therein expressly, legally and well provided for, and the cruel shedding of the best Protestant Blood, in the most unjust Execution of the late Marquis of Argyle, and many other Worthies contrary to all Law and Reason, carried on by the smiting and casting out of more faithful and pious Pastors, and scattering and dissipating more true Flocks and Followers of Christ, than was done in most of the Ten primitive Persecutions, and the deluding of these Lands with all villainous Debaucheries and abominable Licentiousness, to the very profligating of Conscience, Morality and common Honesty from among Men, and thence forward accomplished by a most unrelenting Persecution, and Oppression of the Generality of God's People, in their Consciences, Persons and Estates, with Vexations and Rigours almost incredible, and that for no other Reason, but because they could not actively comply with these notorious Perfidies, and the manifold Profanations and Mischiefs wherewith they are attended.

But this hellish Mystery of antichristian Iniquity and arbitrary Tyranny, imposing upon many at home, too willing, through their Love of Ease, to be abused, and deluding the Protestant Churches abroad (in that woful and visible Indifference that every where reigns) by the vain Pretext of the mere Notion of our Courts empty and simulate Protestant Profession, having of a long Time, under the late King, made most remarkable Advances in the following Particulars, and many more that might be enumerated, all too evidently seen, and heavily felt, to need any explicate Proof or Demonstration.

As 1<sup>mo</sup>. Not only in the abovementioned open and avowed revolting from God, by Breach of sworn Treaties, Covenants and Coronation Oaths, and slighting and despising spontaneous Promises and Proclamations, the overturning the very Foundations of Parliaments, and ranversing, at one Blow, our best and most legal Establishments; the ungrate, as well as unjust putting to Death of most innocent and faithful Men, upon absurd Pretences, cancelled by the Laws and Customs of Nations, and that in the Time of God's greatest Indulgence towards the Authors; the desolating of the Churches, and changing of the Ordinances of God, for setting up the frivolous and superstitious Inventions of Men, the countenancing and encouraging all Vice and Profanity, and the violent and grievous persecuting of all Conscience and conscientious Men.

But next, and more particularly, in the conniving at Papists their Meetings and idolatrous Masses, while, in the mean Time, all Protestant Nonconformists are persecuted with endless Severities.

The raising, keeping up and increasing of standing Forces, the very Bane of all civil and lawful Government, and that without any other Measure, save what the Indigence of Court Luxury, and Profusion did necessarily put unto it.

The declaring and appointing all Judges and Officers to enjoy their Places only during Pleasure, on purpose to make them more supple and compliant to all their Master's Designs.

The abusing of the great Trust of calling and dissolving Parliaments, the most high and necessary Courts of the Kingdoms, by iniquous packing, unseasonable proroguing, pernicious discharging, and insolent baffling them at Pleasure.

The exalting of the King's Supremacy, under the Colour of his pretended Right and Power, about the external Government and Policy of the Church, to an express and absolute Power of enacting and statuting in all Church-meetings and Matters, as he, in his Wisdom, shall think fit, a ready and prepared Tool to bring us back, not only to Popery, but to Paganism.

The strange Perversiop of the high Trust of the Militia, committed to his Majesty expressly for the Protection of good Subjects, and the Assistance of all our Protestant Friends abroad, only to the invading and oppressing, by lawless Hosts of the worst, both of Highlanders and Lowlanders, in Times of profound Peace, the best Parts of the Kingdom, purposely to ruine them, because too Protestant, by free Quarter, and other illegal Exactions, and the making War most causelessly and obstinately against the States of the united Netherland, our best Neighbours, and the strongest Bulwark of the Protestant Interest.

The forcing of poor People, by the extreme Rigours of exorbitant Finings, Imprisonings, Beatings, Stigmatizings, Spoilings, Banishments, and other Violences, for the simple Cause of Nonconformity, to take Arms in their own Defence, as at Pentland and Bothwell-bridge, and then demeaning and executing them, what in Fields, what on Scaffolds, as the most desperate of Traitors, and, at the same Time, involving whole Countries, upon the most slender and absurd Pretences of inevitable Intercommunings and Reset, both in their Crimes and Punishments.

The setting up of the most violent and obnoxious of Men to be Ministers of the Law, and packing Juries and Assizes most partially for their worst Ends.

The straining, stretching and wresting of Law, not only in Prejudice of every one suspected to be disaffected to their evil Courses, but the Violation of all Right, for spoiling and robbing Cities and Incorporations of their ancient and undoubted Privileges.

The transporting of Freemen, as Slaves, to foreign Plantations, for not making Faith to answer (against Law) super inquirendis, as also for not delating Men upon Oath (according to a most impious Law lately made against Nonconformists) in Matters, wherein the Party, put to swear, judges them to be in their Duty, and without Exception of his nearest Relations.

The arbitrary Imprisonings and detaining of free Subjects, without either bringing them to Trial, or allowing them any hearing.

The torturing of several Persons, even five Times more, of conscientious Nonconformists within these Twenty Years, than of all Sorts of Felons and Malefactors in Scotland these hundred Years bypast, and that without either just previous Grounds, regarding of legal Methods, or observing the Measures of common Humanity.

The eliciting of Promises of Indemnity, and the publick Faith interposed, for that effect voluntary Confessions of some, as of Mr. James Mitchel, &c. and then not only retracting and disowning the Promise and Condition upon Oath, in Face of the Justice-court, but farther, witnessing the Confession to the poor Min's Condemnation, notwithstanding the Books of Council, containing the foresaid Indemnity, were produced and laid open before, and at the very Time of their Swearing: Likens, of late, after most cruel and exquisite Tortures practised upon Mr. Spence and Mr. Carstairs, and a full and ample Promise thereafter made them, with an Act upon it, that neither they, nor their Evidence should ever be made use of to their, or to any other Mens Hurt, they nevertheless cause produce, and do sustain Mr. Carstairs's Deposition against Baily of Jerviswood, for an Adminicle or Aid to their lame and defective Probation.

The making Men Offenders, yea, Traitors for Words, and these true, fair and innocent; as the Earl of Argyle for declaring before the Council, after Leave given, and with Submission, and only for exonerating his own Conscience, that he believed, the Parliament intended no Contradiction in the Test, and therefore was willing to take it in their Sense, viz. for securing the Protestant Religion, and that he did not thereby mean to bind up himself from endeavouring lawfully, in Church and State, what Religion and Loyalty might oblige and allow him to do; for which Words nevertheless he was tried and condemned, as a Traitor, in the Loss of his Life, Lands and Goods, and stands de facto deprived of both Lands and Goods, having only saved his Life, in the Extremity, by a gracious providential Escape.

The cruel executing to the Death of several Hundreds within these Twenty Years, besides many Hundreds more, that have either fallen in the Fields, or been made to perish in their Imprisonments, or Transports, and that for the alone Cause, or on the Occasion of their conscientious nonconforming: And some of them (of which Number several poor Women) for their bare Opinion about the King's Breach of Trust, never before by them vented, but simply declared upon Examination, and most Part of them dispatched with that barbarous Inhumanity, as that (after no better Example than that of the bloody Duke of Alva) they were, by beating of Drums, hindred to speak to the People their last and dying Words; and some of them, contrary to the perpetual Custom of Scotland, and all the Forms used in the Christian World, and as if it had been on Design to destroy both their Souls and Bodies, tried, sentenced, and put to Death in one Day, yea, the Time and Hour of their Death industriously concealed from them, that they might be cut off by a more mortal Surprise.

The condemning some to Death, others to the boring of their Tongues, and fining many in most exorbitant Sums, even to 10000 Pounds Sterling, for calling the Duke of York a Papist, notwithstanding the Notoriety of the Matter to all Men, and his Recusancy found and declared by a grand Jury, and expressly supposed by an Exception in his Favours, contained in an Act of Parliament, and that now he goes openly to the Mass, and marches in solemn Processions to the Horror of all good Protestant Subjects.

The loosing and exempting the King's Sons and Brothers, from what themselves conceived to be the best Fence, and greatest Security for the Protestant Religion.

The imposing and pressing of Oaths, without Law, manifestly contradictory, and that by terrible Menacings, violent Beatings, rigorous Imprisonings, and irreligious Swearings, no less barbarous than what was practised by the Spaniards in christianizing the wild Indians.

The eating up of Men by free Quarters, or otherwise falling on them by downright Violence, as driving with drawn Swords, to constrain them to hear, whom they, in their Conscience, judged unsent and uncalculated Curates, to the effacing of all Conscience, and open Scorn of God, and that pure and free Religion which he only accepts.

The compelling the Heritors of Shires to assess themselves and the free Subjects within their Bounds, a Thing expressly denied by Law to the King himself, and only reserved to Parliaments.

The forning upon, harassing and destroying the best Parts of the Country by Four extraordinary Circuits upon one and the same Subject of Bathroel-bridge on purpose, as it were, to justify his Highness's Judgment to his late Majesty, that it would not be well with Scotland until the South of Forth (the better and more substantial Half of that Kingdom) were turned to a hunting Field. And to verify the late Chancellor, the Earl of Aberdeen, his Affirmation at the Council-board, that there was not a loyal Subject westward of the Castle of Edinburgh.

The industrious rising, hindring and eluding the Detection of all Popish Plots.

The shamming of mock Plots upon good Protestants.

The suborning of Witnesses, hounding out and encouraging of Assassines to murder and cut the Throats of honest Men.

And generally in the studied and constant ensnaring, or ruining, upon every Shadow of Pretence, all esteemed either fixed to the Protestant Interest, or well affected to their Country's Liberty.

This wicked Mystery, we say, and Conspiracy of Popery and Tyranny, inseparably twisted both in Experience and Reason in all their Attempts, upon these great and mighty Nations, so unanimously united, and firmly fixed in their contrary Profession, Rights, and Liberties, having made so great a Progress by the Steps abovementioned, is now at length evidently disclosed, revealed, and brought to full Maturity, by the most suspicious (though withal most ingrate) cutting off of the late King, as having indeed very unhappily acted all that Part of which the Conspirators did judge him capable. The ascending of James Duke of York, a notorious Apostate, and bigot Papist, to the Throne, notwithstanding his being thrice excluded by the Commons of England; and that he neither hath given, nor can give, without an hypocritical and damning Cheat, repentant to his Profession, and contemptible to all ingenuous Men, the Oath and Security indispensably required of him, before and at his Entry to the Government. Jam. VI. P. 1, C. 8. the approaching of Two Parliaments both called by him, one in Scotland by his own vigilant Providence, (in procuring it to be enacted in the last Parliament held by him in that Kingdom, that for the future, not only all Members of Parliament, but also all their Electors should take that contradictory and irreligious Oath, commonly called the Test, which no Man owning Conscience, or caring for any Religion, can possibly approve) long since prepared for all his Pleasure. And the other in England packed, caballed, and returned by all the Arts and Methods that either Fraud or Injustice could invent, to render it pliable to his Intentions; and which no doubt he will cajol with all the fair Promises, and large Offers of Laws, that can be desired for securing both the Protestant Religion and their Liberties, providing they will but give Money, which answers all Things, and which will as assuredly frustrate and ranverle all their vain Cautions. The pursuing with indefatigable Malice, even without the Bounds of the Kingdoms, and in all foreign Parts, all honest Men, escaped for their Lives, and that either by publick Addresses or private Violences, so that they are necessarily reduced to that fatal Dilemma, either to do, or die. The entering into, and entertaining more close Correspondences than at any Time before, with Popish Princes and States, especially the King of France, a most notorious Enemy both of the true Religion and Liberty of Mankind. And lastly, by all that may be already seen in the Changes and Alterations he hath lately made, and that for hereafter may be apprehended from a false and bloody Religion, always breathing forth, and practising Fire and Faggot, Murders and Massacres, and a provoked and enraged Mind, possessing and reigning in the most determined of Princes, unquestionably capable, and ready to execute all these bloody Cruelties.

Which Things being all of them either palpable Perversions, or utterly inconsistent with the true and great Ends of Government, rendring our Common-wealth our common Calamity, and him who pretends to be its Protector, its most hostile Enemy, and consequently importing no less to, than a total Dissolution of all the Bonds of Subjection, which the Rulers have first so wickedly broke and cut asunder; and the liberating and allowing all distressed Subjects, whether those already overwhelmed by, or who may justly for hereafter fear to be involved in these Miseries, that undoubted Right and Power, which both God and Nature, with common Reason, and the constant Custom of all Nations have given us, for recovering, defending, and maintaining our Lives and Liberties, and above all, the inestimable Blessing of our pure Religion, to the effect that the same pure Religion, with our just Rights and Liberties, so valiantly asserted by our Ancestors, may be by us faithfully transmitted to our Posterities.

We have been, and are obliged and constrained by extreme Necessity, and for common Safety (the supreme Laws) to take up just and necessary Arms in the Name and Fear of the great God, and the Confidence of his Mercy and Assistance, for our own and our Country's Relief, from the aforesaid most grievous and intolerable Tyrannies and Oppressions, the Defence and Re-establishment of the true and pure Christian Religion, commonly called Protestant, in Opposition to that antichristian Roman Religion, commonly called Papistical, and the Recovery and Re-establishment of all our just Rights, Liberties, and Privileges, according as we stand indispensably obliged thereto, both before God and Men; and that against the said James Duke of York, and all other his Accomplices, our most unnatural and wicked Enemies and Oppressors.

Desiring in the first Place to be deeply humbled each of us before God, for our manifold Sins and Provocations, especially our False-heartedness, and Unsteadfastness in, and Revoltings from our great and manifold Engagements to him, that alone have brought upon us all these sad Mischiefs, earnestly, and with our whole Hearts supplicating, that he would cease from his Anger, cause his Face to shine upon us, and save us for his own Name's sake.

And in the next Place declaring, likeas we hereby expressly declare, that our sincere and single Ends and Designs in this our Undertaking, are first, the restoring and settling of the aforesaid true, reformed, Protestant Religion, in its Power and Purity; and with such a just Comprehension of pure Christian Charity, as may through the good Hand of our God upon us, be truly satisfying to all that fear him, and love our Lord Jesus Christ in Sincerity, renouncing and detesting as well Impostings as Errors, in all Matters of Conscience, and trusting that, after the many teaching Experiences we have had, we shall be for hereafter preserved from all unhappy Misunderstandings; but rather through the Spirit of Truth, Love, and Peace, graciously led into all the Paths thereof.

2dly. The Suppression and perpetual Exclusion of antichristian Popery, with all its idolatrous Superstitions and Falshoods, as also its most bitter Root and Offspring, Prelacy, with its new and wicked Head the Superstition, and all their Abuses, that so not only the Gospel and Work of God may be revived in these Lands, but also all the Churches of Christ abroad thereby refreshed and strengthened.

And 3dly. the restoring of all Men to their just Rights and Liberties, especially the recompensing of all Sufferers, whether unto Blood, or Loss of Liberty and Goods, the Relief of such who are in present Distress, the removing of all Oppression, and establishing such righteous Laws and Methods of Government, as may be most for securing of Liberty and Property, with the greatest Ease and Equality.

Which Things as we purpose and hope to accomplish, only through the Presence of our God with us, and his Blessing upon us, so we are most willing and resolved, that they be all settled and perfected by a free, full, just, and sovereign Representative of all the present Undertakers, and such as shall hereafter sincerely concur and take Part with us; and that in such Forms and Ways, as God by his good Providence can only most happily direct and conduct us unto; declaring and protesting further, that since such have been, and are the manifest Perfidy, Treachery, and Falshood of our Adversaries, not only in their Treaties and Covenants, but also in their Pardons, Indemnities, and Indulgences, as that they leave no Ground or tolerable Assurance of Faith and Trust to be given to them, we will never enter into any Terms of Capitulation, Treaties, or Conditions with them, as to the great Ends of this Undertaking; but on the contrary, prosecute the same with all Reality, Constancy, and Vigour, without any Separation, Division, or backdrawing, until until they be perfectly and finally obtained. Upon which Grounds, and for which Ends abovementioned, we not only hereby most sincerely and firmly protest and declare, as in the Presence of God, constantly and perpetually to adhere, to assist, and maintain one another to the utmost, against all Deadly; but do moreover, freely and heartily resolve and engage our selves, to countenance and concur with all our persecuted and oppressed Brethren and Friends, in England and Ireland, who, from the like Reasons and Motives, shall be induced and stirred up to the like Undertaking, for the same or the like Ends.

Wherefore, we most seriously and humbly beseech and obtest, in the Bowels of our Lord Jesus Christ, all that love his Truth, and this our righteous Cause, none excepted, tho' either formerly little concerned for, and favourable to us and these Interests, or even still in actual Opposition against us and them, (their sincere Repentance being at all Times to God most acceptable, and not to be better witnessed before Men, than by a contrary and vigorous Amendment) to come and joyn with us for God's Glory and Gospel, our Country, Lives, Rights, and Liberties, and our Posterities, and all our Hope, against an apostate Papist, an usurping and persecuting Tyrant, by the most sacred Article of his Religion, our mortal Enemy under the Pain of his own Damnation, and by the fundamental and express Laws of the Land, Jam. VI. P. 1. C. 9. and P. 20 C. 5. incapable of the meanest Office within the Kingdom, and in effect a declared Enemy and Rebel, Jam. VI. Par. 3. C. 47. and who even by the Act lately made by himself, for paving the Way to his Succession, Char. II. Parl. 3. Chap. 2. can have no Shadow of Pretence to the Benefit thereof, unless he first instruct himself both to be the lawful, and the immediate and nearest Heir of the Crown, which, without satisfying the old Law, Jam. VI. Parl. 1. Chap. 8. at the same Time ratified, Char. II. Parl. 3. Chap. 1. by swearing to embrace and maintain the true reformed Protestant Religion, he can never possibly be, as was then distinctly understood and declared by the principal Framers of that Act, and against his Adherents and Partakers, a perjured, revolted, and self-condemned Generation, upon whom the Lord, who will not give his Glory to another, hath formerly got himself a Name and Renown before all the Nations, whom our Sins only have exalted; and whose Hearts can never endure, or their Hands be strong, when the Lord of Hosts, who is on our Side, and hath a perpetual Indignation against all the wicked in the Earth, shall arise and deal with them. And this our most earnest Call and Request, we confidently hope shall be the more readily hearkned unto, and heartily and seriously complied with, that in the Issue, through the Blessing of God, it assuredly promises not only the Restitution of Truth, Prosperity, and Glory to these long misgoverned, harassed, and disgraced Nations; but the sure Defence and Protection of true Religion and Liberty every where, (Britain's certain and great Interest, of late most shamefully abandoned) and even the Depression of Antichrist, and the Advancement and Exaltation of the Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ in all the Earth. Let us therefore be of good Courage, and play the Men for our People, and for the Cause of our God; and the Lord do that which seemeth him good.

Argyle's Declaration to his Vassals. N<sup>o</sup>. CXIII.

I Shall not mention my Case published and printed in Latin and Dutch, and more largely in English, nor need I repete the printed Declaration, emitted by several Noblemen, Gentlemen, and others of both Nations now in Arms; but because the suffering of me and my Family are therein mentioned, I have thought it fit for me to declare for my self, That as I go to Arms, with those who have appointed me to conduct them, for no private nor personal End, and only for these contained in the said Declaration, which I have concerted with them, and approved of; so I do claim no Interest, but what I had before the pretended Forfeiture of my Family, and have sufficient Right to; and that I do freely, and as a Christian, fully forgive all personal Injuries against my Person or Family, to all that shall not oppose, but joyn and concur with us in our present Undertaking, for the Ends mentioned in the said Declaration; and hereby I oblige me never to pursue them in Judgment or out of Judgment. And I further declare, that obtaining the quiet and peaceable Possession of what belonged to my Father and my self, before the pretended Forfeiture, I shall satisfy all Debts due by my Father and my self, as far as any Heir or Debtor can be obliged.

And as my Faithfulness to his late Majesty and his Government, has sufficiently appeared to all unbiassed Persons, void of Malice, so I do with Grief acknowledge my former too much complying with, and concurring at the Methods have been taken to bring us to the said Condition we are now in, tho' God knows, never concurring to the Design.

I have now with God's Strength suffered patiently my unjust Sentence and Banishment, Three Years and an Half, and never offered to make any Uprore or Defence by Arms, to disturb the Peace upon my private Concern; but the King being now dead, and the Duke of York having taken off his Mask, and having abandoned and invaded our Religion and Liberties, resolving to enter into the Government, and exercise it contrary to Law, I think it not only just, but my Duty to God and my Country, to use my utmost Endeavours to oppose and repress his Usurpation and Tyranny; and therefore being assisted and furnished very nobly by several good Protestants, and invited, and accompanied by severals of both Nations, to lead them, I resolve, as God shall enable me, to use their Assistance of all Kind, toward the Ends expressed in the said Declaration. I do hereby earnestly invite and obtest all honest Protestants, and particularly all my Friends and blood Relations, to concur with us in the said Undertaking.

And as I have written several Letters, so having no other way fully to intimate my Mind to others, I do hereby require all my Vassals every where, and all within my several Jurisdictions, with the fencible Men within their Command, to go to Arms, and to joyn and concur with us, according to the said Declaration, as they will be answerable at their highest Perils, and to obey the particular Orders they shall receive from me from Time to Time.

JAMES, by the Grace of GOD, King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith: To of Our Privy Council, or Messengers at Arms, Our Sheriffs in that Part, conjunctly and severally, specially constitute, Greeting: Forasmuch as Archibald Campbel late Earl of Argyle, (that arch and hereditary Traitor) having, with some other his Accomplices and Associates, both of this and other Nations, combined together to disturb Our Government, and the Peace and Tranquillity of this Our ancient Kingdom, and having associated to themselves the vile and sacrilegious Murderers of James late Archbishop of St. Andrews, and even that bloody Miscreant Rumbold the Maltster, who was to have embued his Hands in the sacred Blood of Our dearest Brother, and to have been the principal Actor of that hellish Tragedy, designed at the Ry in England; they, pursuant to their traitorous and wicked Plots and Designs, having landed in some of Our Western and Highland Islands, and there pillaged and harassed Our People for a considerable Space bygone; and now, after all their desperate Endeavours, it having pleased almighty God to give us Our Forces that good Success over these Our Enemies, as to defeat and totally rout them many of whose chief Ringleaders are now taken, and particularly the said arch Traitor Archibald Campbel, Rumbold the Maltster, John Aylief, called Colonel Aylief, (which last, out of the Terror of his atrocious Guilt and Despair, endeavoured to kill himself after he was taken, by giving himself a Wound in the Belly with a Knife, in the Prison of Our Burgh of Glasgow) and many others: And whereas there are several of that hellish Crew not yet taken, who may skulk and lurk in this Our Realm, with these of their Party, and be sheltered by disaffected Persons; and We, being resolved to prosecute and pursue those execrable Rebels and Traitors, until they be apprehended and brought to condign Punishment, do hereby, with Advice of Our Privy Council, require and command all Our good and loving Subjects, and particularly all Our Sheriffs and other Magistrates, and the Officers of Our standing Forces and Militia, to use their utmost Endeavours for apprehending the said Rebels and Traitors, and bringing them to Justice; and for that effect, to convocate Our Lieges, and use all other warlike Force against them: And for their Encouragement, We hereby not only indemnify and fully pardon them of any Blood, Slaughter, Mutilation, Fire-raising, or such like Inconveniences, which may fall out in this Our Service; but We do hereby promise and assure any Person or Persons, who shall apprehend the Persons underwritten, dead or alive, or discover them so as they may be apprehended, the Rewards following, viz. For John Cochran, sometime called Sir John Cochran of Ochiltree, Patrick Hume, sometime called Sir Patrick Hume of Polwart, forfeited Traitors, Archibald Campbel Son to the Lord Neil Campbel, Charles and John Campbels Sons to the said arch Traitor Archibald Campbel, Pringle of Torwoodlee, Sir Duncan Campbel of Auchinbreck, and each of them, the Sum of Eighteen hundred Merks Scots Money; Denholm of Westbiels, and Balfour, and Fleming, Murderers and Assassines of the said late Archbishop of St. Andrews, William Cleaveland, called Captain Cleaveland, and Stuart younger of Culnefs, Grandchild to Sir James Stuart sometime Provost of Edinburgh, and each of them, One thousand Merks Money foresaid; for Wisheart Master of one of the Ships who came along with the said arch Traitor Archibald Campbel, Five hundred Merks, and for every fanatical Preacher who was with the said Rebels, One thousand Merks Money foresaid. And We further declare, that if any of Our Subjects shall be so desperately wicked, as to harbour, reset, entertain, intercommune, converse, correspond with, or comfort any of the said Persons, any manner of way, or shall not give Intelligence of them, or shall not give their Assistance against them, that they shall be holden, repute, treated, and demeaned as Art and Part of, and accessory to the said horrid Crime of Treason and Rebellion against Us, and Our Royal Government, with the utmost Severity of Law. And generally, We hereby prohibit and discharge all Our Subjects, from harbouring, resetting, lodging, or entertaining any Persons whatsoever, unless they have a Pass from these authorized by Our former Proclamations to grant the same, as they will answer at their highest Peril. And that this Our Pleasure may be known to all Our Lieges, Our Will is, and We charge you strictly and command, that incontinent, these Our Letters seen, ye pass to the Market-crosses of Edinburgh, Linlithgow, Stirling, Lanerk, Air, Renfrew, Rutherglen, Glasgow, Irwin, Dumbarrow, Wigtoun, Kirkcudbright, Dumfries, Inveraray, and all the other Market-crosses of the head Burghs of the Shires of this Kingdom, and there, by open Proclamation, in Our Royal Name and Authority, make Publication of Our Pleasure in the Premises. And We further hereby recommend to the Right Reverend Our Archbishops and Bishops, that they cause this Our Royal Proclamation be read from the Pulpits, by the Ministers of the several Parishes in their Dioceses, respective, upon the first Lord's Day after the same shall be delivered to them; requiring hereby all Our Sheriffs, to cause publish and deliver this Our Proclamation in Manner above said, immediately after the same comes to their Hands, as they will answer the contrary at their highest Peril.

Given under Our Signet, at Edinburgh the Twenty fourth Day of June, One thousand six hundred and eighty five, and of Our Reign the First Year.

THe which Day, the Lord Provost, Bailies, Council, and Deacons of Crafts, being convened in Council, taking to their Consideration, that notwithstanding of divers Acts of Council, made for purging the City of Vagabonds, Beggars, and other idle Persons, who daily trouble the Inhabitants, and others his Majesty's Lieges resorting thereto; yet they are so numerous, that the Citizens and other his Majesty's Lieges cannot, without great Trouble, walk upon the Streets, which is very burdensome to the City, and disgraceful to the Place; considering, that by the 15th Act of the 3<sup>d</sup> Session of Our late sovereign Lord's first Parliament, it is declared, that it shall be lawful to all Persons or Societies, who have or shall set up any Manufactories within this Kingdom, to seize upon and apprehend any Vagabonds, who shall be found begging, or who being masterless and out of Service, and have not wherewith to maintain themselves, by their own Means and Work, and impowering them to employ the said vagabond Persons and their Bairns, in their common Work, and declaring they shall continue therein during their Lifetime, and shall be subject to their Masters Correction and Chastisement, in all Manner of Correction, (Life and Torture excepted) the said Persons being always employed by the said Manufactories, with Advice of the Magistrates of the Place where they shall be seized upon: And the Council being now resolved, that all the Vagabonds, Beggars, and other idle Persons, and their Children, that are above the Age of Five Years, that can be found upon the Streets of the City, or in any Part of the same, or Suburbs thereof, shall be apprehended and put in the Correction-house, and set at Work to spin and card, and working such Manufactory-work as they shall be employed to do by the Keeper of the Correction-house, and his Servants, which they judge to be the best Expedient for purging the City and Suburbs of the said idle Persons and Vagabonds, and preventing the Increase of them in Time coming. Therefore, they hereby command and charge these Persons who shall receive the Magistrates Commission, to take and apprehend all such Vagabonds, idle Beggars, Whores, Thieves, and masterless Persons, and their Children, above the Age of Five Years, who shall be found within the City, or any Part thereof, or Suburbs of the same, and present them to the Magistrates, that thereafter they may be imprisoned within the said House of Correction, to be set at Work by the said Master of the Correction house, and his Servants, in Manner foresaid, who are to remain therein during all the Days of their Lifetime, conform to the Tenor of the said Act of Parliament, during the which Space they are to receive all Manner of Punishment and Correction, (Life and Torture excepted.) And in like Manner, the Council taking to Consideration, that the City hath been, and is greatly abused, by suffering Strangers, Vagabonds, untie Persons, poor and indigent Bodies, to plant and have their Habitation within this City; and that by harbouring of the said Persons, (and such as they refer) the Town is defiled with all Kind of Vice, the Liberty of Freemen usurped, the City overburdened with sustaining of that Kind of People, their Wives, Children, and such as they refer, particularly in the Time of Dearth, and the monthly Contribution appointed for their own Poor, employed and consumed upon them: And that for Remedy thereof, the Magistrates and Council, by their Act, of the Date the 22 Day of December, 1676 Years, did statute and ordain, That no Persons set their Houses or Lands within the City, or Suburbs thereof, in any Time hereafter, to any unfree Persons, that are not landed Gentlemen, or Members of the College of Justice, without a special Ticket from the Bailie of the Quarter, in Writ, within whose Bounds the said Lands ly, under the Pain of an Unlaw of Twenty Pounds, to be taken off the Setters or Owners of the said Lands, or Houses, for ilk Person to whom their Land or House was to be set, with the Escheat of a Year's Mail to the Town's Use: And where any Lands or Houses are set to such Persons, that the Owners or Setters remove the said Persons instantly; and that the Bailies shall give no Ticket to the said unfree Persons, but upon Caution to be found acted in the Town's Books, that they shall keep and fulfill the Articles following, to wit, That they shall receive no Vagabonds, naughty or vicious Persons, nor any who are suspect of Theft, or Refet of Theft, or of keeping of Brothel-houses, nor masterless Persons within their Houses, under the Pain of Twenty Pounds, so oft as they fail. Item. They shall use no unlawful Vocation, or usurp the Liberty of a Freeman, under the said Pain. Item. That neither they, their Servants, Wives, nor Children, shall be burdenable to the good Town, under the Pain of an Unlaw of an Hundred Merks. Item. That they shall be no ways disobedient to the Church, or Magistrates, or Officers of the said Burgh, under the said Pain, and their Penalties to be paid by the said Cautioners. The Council do revive the foresaid Act, in the whole Heads, Articles, and Clauses thereof, and ordain the same to take Effect, and to be put to due Execution in all Time coming. And further, it is statute and ordained, that outland poor Beggars, and other Poor that have not been Burghesses Bairns in this Burgh, remove and dispatch themselves forth of this Burgh, Bounds and Liberties thereof, and to retire to the Place or Parish where they were born, or formerly resided, so that they be not found nor seen within the same at any Time hereafter, under the Pain of putting of them in the Thieves-hole, Forty eight Hours for the first Fault, and scourging of them thereafter, as they shall be found within the Bounds foresaid: And ordain thir Presents to be printed, and published through the City and Suburbs, by Tuck of Drum, and affixed upon the most conspicuous Places of this City, that none pretend Ignorance. King's Letter to the Parliament, with the Parliament's Answer; and the Commissioner's Speech, April 29. 1686. N<sup>o</sup>. CXV.

JAMES R.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

THe great Testimonies We had of your Loyalty and Affection to Our Royal Person and Government, at your last Session, ( in which you not only made an humble Offer of your Duty in ample Manner, and shewed your Abhorrence of the Rebellion then raised against Us, and your Readiness on that and all other Occasions to stand by Us with your Lives and Fortunes ; ) but ( wisely considering how much the Forces which former Parliaments had given Us Supplies to maintain, supported by your Assistance, and, blessed by God, were instrumental in ending that unnatural Rebellion ) you gave Us the Occasion, by augmenting your Supplies, to add to Our Forces, ( and consequently to your own Security ) for all which as We then returned you Our most hearty and Royal Thanks, and considered you the Examples to Our other Subjects, of Loyalty, Duty and Affection to Us, ( as you had been in Our former Difficulties ) so it stirred up in Us an ardent Desire of making such Returns unto you, as might every way make you find the Advantage of your Faithfulness and Duty to Us.

It is for this end that We have again desired to meet you in this Session.

We have considered your Interest as much as Our Distance from you could bring into Our Prospect, and those Things which We found proper for it, whether in relation to Trade and Commerce, or easing some Things uneasy to you amongst yourselves, We have fully instructed Our Commissioner ( with your Advice and Consent ) to conclude so as may be most for the general Good of that Our ancient Kingdom.

We have made the Opening of a free Trade with England Our particular Care, and are proceeding in it with all imaginable Application, and are hopeful, in a short Time, to have considerable Advances made in it. We have considered the Trouble that many are put to daily, by Prosecutions before Our Judges, or the Hazard that they ly under, for their Accession to the late Rebellions ; and to shew the World ( even Our greatest Enemies themselves ) that Mercy is Our Inclination, and Severity what is by their Wickedness extorted from Us, We have sent down to be past in your Presence, Our full and ample Indemnity, for all Crimes committed against Our Royal Person or Authority : And whilst We shew these Acts of Mercy to the Enemies to Our Person, Crown, and Royal Dignity, We cannot be unmindful of others Our innocent Subjects, those of the Roman Catholick Religion, who have, with the Hazard of their Lives and Fortunes, been always assitant to the Crown, in the worst of Rebellions and Usurpations, though they lay under Discouragements hardly to be named : Them We do heartily recommend to your Care, to the end, that as they have given good Experience of their true Loyalty and peaceable Behaviour, so, by your Assistance, they may have the Protection of Our Laws, and that Security under Our Government, which others of Our Subjects have, not suffering them to ly under Obligations which their Religion cannot admit of. By doing whereof, you will give a Demonstration of the Duty and Affection you have for Us, and do Us most acceptable Service.

This Love We expect you will shew to your Brethren, as you see We are an indulgent Father to you all.

For these, and such other Matters as We conceive for Our Service, and the universal Good of the Nation, We have sent Our right trusty, and right entirely beloved Cousin and Counsellor, Alexander Earl of Murray, Secretary of State for that Our ancient Kingdom, Our Commissioner to you, believing that none will be more acceptable than one so immediately employed and trusted about Our Person, of whose long and faithful Services We have full Experience, in every one of the several Employments he has been in, and of whose Loyalty and Affection to Our Person and Service We are fully convinced : To him We desire you to give entire Credit, as one fully instructed and trusted by Us, from whose Experience and faithful Endeavours, with your Loyalty, Love and Duty to Us, We have good Reason to expect a happy Conclusion to this Session : And you may assure your selves in general, and every one of you in particular, that We shall have both the general Concern of the Nation and yours, into Our most particular Regard, which We shall express by Our Royal Favour, upon all suitable Occasions. So not only expecting your Compliance with Us, but that, by the Manner of it, you will shew the World your Readiness to meet Our Inclinations, We bid you most heartily Farewel.

Given at Our Court at Whitehall, the Twelfth Day of April, 1686. and of Our Reign the second Year.

By his Majesty's Command,

MELFORD.

The Parliament of Scotland's dutiful Answer to His Majesty's Letter.

May it please your sacred Majesty,

WE do return your Majesty our most humble and hearty Thanks, for the frequent Marks of your Royal Favour express to this your Majesty's ancient Kingdom upon all Occasions, and particularly in your Majesty's gracious Letter, dated the 21 of April last ; and your Majesty may, with full Assurance, expect, expect, that your gracious Acceptance of those Services we did you in the last Session of this Parliament, will encourage us to continue our Zeal and Firmness in this, for your Majesty's Service, and the Royal Interest upon which, under God, we acknowledge our Happiness and Preservation do entirely depend.

Your Majesty's Care of the Trade of this Kingdom, (which is at present exceedingly decayed) and particularly your Royal Endeavours to procure us a free Trade with your Kingdom of England, will very much enable us to make these Supplies effectual, which we have so heartily and willingly undertaken, for the Security of the Crown, and Safety of the Kingdom; nor shall the Advantages that can arise thereby, be more acceptable to us upon any other account, than so far as they may be a Testimony of your Majesty's Kindness, and conduce to those great Ends.

Your Majesty's Clemency, testified in the Offer of an Indemnity to these desperate Rebels, who could have expected Pardon from no Monarch on Earth but your sacred Majesty, and the greatest Aggravation of whose Crimes lies in opposing such gracious and merciful Princes, will (we hope) not only convince your other Subjects, how happy they are under your Government, but reclaim them from bearing any further Enmity to it; and to let them see how extravagant, as well as undutiful, their Endeavours will be, in opposing your Majesty, and your Royal Successors, we do again most sincerely and heartily offer you our Lives and Fortunes, for suppressing all such as shall, upon any Account or Pretext whatsoever, attempt, either by private Contrivances, or open Rebellions, to disquiet your glorious Reign.

As to that Part of your Majesty's Letter, relating to your Subjects of the Roman Catholick Religion, we shall, in obedience to your Majesty's Commands, and with Tenderness to their Persons, take the same into our serious and dutiful Consideration, and go as great Lengths therein as our Conscience will allow, not doubting that your Majesty will be careful to secure the Protestant Religion, established by Law.

Your Majesty's Commissioner has, to our very great Satisfaction, signified to us, that he is fully instructed by your Majesty, to promote every thing which may tend to the Improvement of the Wealth and Prosperity of this your ancient Kingdom, and we hope, that by his wise Care and Conduct, this Session of Parliament may be brought to a happy Conclusion; and to him, seeing your Majesty has well judged that none could be more acceptable, we shall give that entire Credit and Concurrence, and pay that Respect which is due to the eminent Character which your Majesty has been pleased to give him; and to that constant Loyalty and Fidelity with which he has acquitted himself in all the former Trusts and Employments which he has born under your Majesty's Royal Brother and your self, hoping that we shall give him just Reason to report, at his Return to your Majesty, with how much Zeal, Duty and Affection, we endeavour to deserve the being considered by your Majesty as

May it please your sacred Majesty,

Your Majesty's most humble, most faithful,

and most obedient Subjects and Servants;

Edinburgh, May 6: 1686.

His Majesty's high Commissioner's Speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

THe great Sense which his sacred Majesty retains of your Loyalty, Duty and Zeal for his Service, and of your signal Affection to his Person and Interest, so kindly expressed in your Proceedings of the last Session, hath determined him to meet you again so soon in this, to the end, that as you did then by very seasonable Proofs of your dutiful Obedience, even during the raging Insolence of an unnatural Rebellion, demonstrate your Loyalty and firm Adherence to the Crown; so his Majesty would not be wanting on his Part, to shew his paternal and royal Care of you his ancient and loving People, by giving you fresh Opportunities, of doing such Things as may tend to the universal Good of the Nation, as a generous Return to your Affections.

As all the States and Ranks of Men in this Kingdom, have been most eminent in their Loyalty, Love and Deference to his Majesty in their several Degrees and Capacities, both when he honoured you with his royal Presence, and since; so his Majesty is graciously resolved, that you shall, in your several Stations, share of the Effects and Influences of his royal Care, Tenderness and Protection, by Marks of his royal Favour, which he intends shall be as comprehensive and general, for the Security and Happiness of you all, as your Duty and Kindness towards him have been remarkable.

Pursuant to this, I am to assure you that his Majesty doth endeavour, with all imaginable Care, to open a free Intercourse of Trade with his Kingdom of England, as one of the surest Ways to save his royal Burrows from the Ruin threatned by the Decay of Commerce, and will leave nothing unessay'd that may promote a Work so beneficial to this Kingdom.

And for your further Encouragement, the King hath fully instructed his Envoy at the Court of France, to use his utmost Endeavours for having the fifty Solz per Tun discharged, and for recovering the Possession of the other Privileges of the Scotts Merchants trading with that Kingdom, which have been now a long Time suffered to run into Desuetude.

And his Majesty conceiving that the Burghs of Regality and Barony, enjoy more of that Trade, for which the Burrows Royal bear the sixth Part of the Cels of the Nation, than does justly fall to their Share, has therefore been graciously pleased to instruct me, to give his royal Consent to such Regulations therein as you shall think just and equitable.

And there having been several Complaints made to his Majesty, of the Trouble which Merchants of this Kingdom meet with in the Matter of the Staple and Trade with the Netherlands, I am fully instructed to give his Consent to what you shall advise as reasonable, for the Redress thereof for the future.

And whereas his Majesty is informed of the great Prejudice which this Kingdom suffers by the Importation of Irish Cattle, Horses and Viſtual: I am alſo fully inſtructed, not only to give his royal Aſſent to whatever may free you from that Abufe in Time coming; but likewiſe to enquire into the Connivances and Malverſations of thoſe who in Times paſt have been intruſted to hinder and diſcover all ſuch illegal Importations, to the end that they may be puniſhed according to Law.

I am alſo to acquaint you, that the King being informed, that the Want of an open Mint is a ſenſible Prejudice to the Traffick of the Kingdom; I am therefore impowered to give his royal Aſſent to what the Wiſdom of this Parliament ſhall think juſt and reaſonable in that Point.

As his Majesty, in his royal Prudence and Goodneſs, intends to promote the Trade of this Nation, by all poſſible and fit Methods; ſo he hath commanded me to tell you, that he is not at this Time to demand any more Supplies or Impoſitions of any Kind, notwithſtanding the great and neceſſary Charge which the ſuppreſſing of the late horrid Rebellion has put him to; being fully convinced that your Affection and Alacrity have already prompted you to give all that was convenient for you to ſpare. In Requital of which, he is reſolved to do all that he can for the Advancement of the Good and Intereſt, and increaſing the Wealth of this Kingdom; a Thing which his Majesty is very ſenſible has been a long Time too much neglected, conceiving his royal State inſeparable from the Happineſs and flouriſhing Proſperity of his People. And the King well knowing how heavy the Cefs lies upon the Land-rents, if it were not indiſpenſably neceſſary, as well for your own Safety, as the Support of his Government, would willingly diſcharge ſome Part thereof: But this being impoſſible, I am fully inſtructed to paſs any Law, with your Advice and Conſent, that may give Eaſe in that Matter, not diminiſhing the former Quota.

I am further to acquaint you, that his Majesty has taken ſpecial Care to inſtruct me fully for giving his royal Conſent to all ſuch Laws and Regulations, as may ſecure exact Payment to the Country, from all his Officers and Soldiers in their Quarters, both local and tranſient, for the future; and to ſee exemplary Punishment inſlicted upon all Perſons who heretofore have oppreſſed any of his loving People, by denying or detaining their juſt Dues from them.

And for eaſing the Commons of many Oppreſſions, alledged to be committed by Commiſſars, I am likewiſe impowered to paſs an Act, with your Advice and Conſent, for regulating the ſame.

That which will ſurpriſe you much, is, that as the King is ſolicitous to provide for the Security of this Kingdom, and to encourage and cheriſh his dutiful and loyal Subjects as his obedient Children, ſo as a tender hearted and compaſſionate Father is willing and ready to forgive, and mercifully to pardon the unexcusable Faults and Crimes of ſuch as have behaved themſelves undutifully, and even rebelliously againſt him. And therefore to ſettle and quiet the Minds of his People, and once more to drive away the Fears of the Guilty, by delivering them from their Apprehenſions of that Punishment which they have ſo juſtly deſerved, he hath graciouſly been pleaſed to inſtruct Me, to paſs his full and ample Indemnity, with ſome few neceſſary and reaſonable Exceptions, for all paſt Crimes and Miſdemeanors whatſoever; which may convince the World that his Majesty delights, by ſweet and gentle Methods of Mercy and Lenity, to reduce all to Duty and Obedience, and that nothing but their own Perverſeneſs and incurable Obſtinacy in Evil, can force from him that juſt Severity which ſometimes becomes neceſſary for the Safety of his People and Government, though contrary to his princely and merciful Temper.

And now, My Lords and Gentlemen, after ſo great and excellent Deſigns for promoting the Honour, the Eaſe and Wealth of this Kingdom, after his Reſolution to pardon ſo many Enemies, and to free ſo many of the Guilty from further ſevere, but juſt Proſecutions, his Majesty believeth, that none will wonder, if he deſire, by the Advice and Conſent of this his great Council, to give Eaſe and Security to ſome of his good Subjects of the Roman Catholick Religion, who have in all Times been firm to the Monarchy, and ready to ſacrifice their Lives and Fortunes for the Service and Security of the Crown: So that his Majesty, who ſo perfectly underſtands the loyal and dutiful Temper and Genius of Scotland, reſts fully perſwaded of your ready and cheerful Compliance with his royal Deſire and Inclinations, tending ſo much to your own Security and his Satisfaction; and that you will ſend me back to my great and royal Maſter, with the good Tidings of the continued and dutiful Loyalty of this his ancient Kingdom. By which you will ſhew your ſelves the beſt and moſt affectionate Subjects, to the beſt, the incomparable and moſt heroick Prince in the World.

Act anent the penal Statutes, 1686. No. CXVI.

THE Eſtates of Parliament taking to their ſerious Conſideration, his Majesty's Deſire expreſt in his gracious Letter directed to them, for granting Eaſe and Relief to his Subjects of the popiſh Perſwaſion, and that altho' there are ſeveral Laws and Acts of Parliament, containing ſanguinary and other Punishments againſt Papiſts, yet ſuch hath been the Force of Chriſtian Charity, and the Meekneſs and Lenity of the Proſeſtant Religion, that theſe Laws have ſeldom or never been put in Execution ſince the Reformation by their religious Predeceſſors; and as the Eſtates of Parliament are firmly reſolved to adhere to the true Proſeſtant Religion by Law eſtabliſhed within this Kingdom, and which is, and always ſhall be dearer to them than all their worldly Concerns; yet ſo far as their Religion and Conſcience will allow, to yield an humble and dutiful Compliance with his Majesty's Deſires. Therefore his Majesty with Advice and Conſent of his Eſtates of Parliament, ſtatutes and ordains, that thoſe of his Majesty's Subjects, who are of the Romiſh Religion, are, and ſhall be, under the Protection of his Majesty's Government and Laws, for their private and civil Intereſts, and ſhall not for the Exerciſe of their Religion in their private Houſes, (all publick Worſhip being hereby excluded) incur the Danger of ſanguinary and other Punishments contained in any Laws or Acts of Parliament made againſt the ſame. It is always hereby declared, that this Immunity and Forbearance granted to Papiſts, for the Exerciſe of their Religion in their private Houſes allenarly, ſhall nonoways import any Allowance or Approbation of their Religion, or any ways evacuate, infringe or pre-judge the Laws or Acts of Parliament made against Popery, or in favours of the Protestant Religion, and particularly shall not derogate from, evacuate or prejudge the 6 Act, Parl. 3. King Charles II. entitled, Act anent Religion and the Test, or any other Acts or Laws enjoining the Oaths of Allegiance, and of the Test, to be taken by all Persons in Offices of publick Trust, civil, ecclesiastick, or military; all which are hereby declared, shall continue in their full Force, Strength and Effect, to the Ends and Intents for which they were made; and whereunto these Presents shall make no Derogation in any Sort, without Prejudice always to the foresaid Immunity and Forbearance granted to Papists for the Exercise of their Religion in their private Houses, with, and under the express Limitations and Restrictions abovementioned, and no otherwise.

Reasons why none who own the present Government, can consent to abolish the penal Statutes. 1686. No. CXVII.

1<sup>mo</sup>. Because they being guilty of Idolatry, as all Protestants do agree, in the worshipping of the Hosts, Angels, Images, &c. and Popery is declared to be so, in the 1 Parliament of K. Jam. VI. Act 111. and Act 5. and this being so hateful to God, and peremptorily forbidden, and dreadfully threatened in the second Commandment, and so severely punished by God's Ordinance, Ex. d. 32. and Deut. 13. by the Law of Nature, Job 31. 28. and the Committers of it excluded from the Kingdom of Heaven, 1 Cor. 6. and 9. Gal. 5. 20. Eph. 5. 7. seeing these Laws are so agreeable to the Laws of God and Nature, none can in Reason and Conscience consent to the abolishing of them, especially seeing all due Respect is preserved to our King, who by the Law of the Land, having none over him, is our supreme Ruler; but they ought to be still obliging upon Subjects.

2<sup>do</sup>. Because in the general Confession of Faith, which K. James subscribed, with his Family, at Edinburgh January 28 Anno 1561. the Year of his Reign 14. and was enjoined by him, that all should subscribe Anno 1581. the second of March, and of his Reign the 14. and subscribed by all Sorts of Persons Anno 1590. They were also solemnly sworn before God, to detest and abandon all popish Errors, naming them particularly, and to continue in the Doctrine, and Discipline of the Church of Scotland, according to the Word of God, and established Laws (amongst which are the penal Statutes) under the highest Pains temporal and eternal; and since that Time, these solemn Oaths have been frequently reiterated by all in Authority, yea, by all the Inhabitants of this Nation, so that none can consent to the taking away of penal Statutes against Papists, without the greatest Prevarication, and Perfidy, or Perjury before God and Man that ever was heard of in the World.

3<sup>io</sup>. It is most contrary to the Oath of the Test, and inconsistent with it, which was established by Law in that Parliament, wherein his present Majesty was high Commissioner for his royal Brother King Charles II. by virtue whereof our Parliament did swear it, and Counsellors, Judges, all Magistrates, Bishops, Ministers, all Officers and Soldiers, and others in publick Trust, and many others, Heritors, &c. have taken it. For in it, 1<sup>mo</sup> they solemnly declare, that they profess sincerely the Protestant Religion, which none can do in earnest, who are not for the securing of it against the open and avowed Enemies thereof, by the Laws judged necessary to secure it, by our Predecessors and our selves, which are already made, but consent to the removing of them. 2<sup>do</sup>. They swear they shall never consent to any Change or Alteration contrary thereto, so whatsoever Change or Alteration (without Limitation) contrary to it, is abjured: But the consenting to remove the penal Statutes, especially in Parliament, bringing in at least a Toleration for Popery by Law, which is as contrary to our Religion as Darkness is to Light, is a manifest acting against it, and for Popery, and so is notorious Perjury. 3<sup>io</sup>. They swear to renounce the Pope and all foreign Jurisdiction, Powers, Superiorities, civil and ecclesiastick, while they consent to tolerate Papists, and sobring them in Place of Trust, by consenting to the removing of these penal Statutes, they yield to them, it makes that Part of their Oath impossible to be kept. 4<sup>io</sup>. They swear to bear Faith to his Majesty, and to his Heirs and lawful Successors, which they cannot do in consenting, that these who own another Jurisdiction superior to him, in his own Dominions, should have penal Statutes established by Law, taken off them, and especially considering their Principles may destroy the Succession; of their own Nature tend to do it utterly, if it be Protestant; witness the holy League in France, and the Oath enjoined to be rendered by the second Lateran Council, to all in Power in Church and State of their Religion, Caranza's Summa Concil. Pag. 628. 510. They swear that they shall never endeavour any Change or Alteration, in the Church or State established by the Laws of this Kingdom, which cannot be performed if they consent in Parliament to take away these penal Statutes, against such who profess to be under another Government of the Church, and are sworn Subjects to a foreign Power, as all Papists are. 6<sup>io</sup>. They swear to the utmost of their Power to defend, assist and maintain his Majesty's Power and Jurisdiction aforesaid, against all Deadly, &c. as they shall answer to God. How then can any be clear from Perfidy, who consent to take away these Statutes that secure these Jurisdictions to his Majesty's Person and Successors? And finally, that they shall not accept or use any Dispensation from any Creature whatsoever as to this solemn Oath; what a Complication of Perjuries will be here, if this be consented to? as God forbid.

4<sup>io</sup>. These Statutes have been thought necessary for securing our Religion, by our wise, zealous and godly Ancestors, and they have been confirmed by all Parliaments since the Reformation, although there was little Cause of Fear of Popery from abroad or at home; but now Popery having so prevailed abroad, and being so cruel and raging, and those of that Profession being in Places of greatest Trust at home, and the Court and these Lands being filled with th. Emissaries of Rome, and some making Defection from the Truth, when there is most Need to secure our Religion, to consent to take these penal Statutes away, were not only to encourage Apostacy, but is a treacherous breaking down the Walls of our Religion, and to invite the Enemy to enter to destroy us and all our dearest Concerns, especially our Religion.

510. His present Majesty, as high Commissioner for his royal Brother K. Charles II. did bear Witness to, and consent to the Ratification of all these Acts, and about the Test and Religion, and since his coming to the Crown, hath past an Act for securing our Religion by his Commissioner and Parliament, ratifying all the former Acts and Laws for its Establishment; wherefore his Parliament did render him hearty Thanks in a special Manner, and he hath promised several Times, to defend and maintain the Protestant Religion, as now profest amongst us, as our Bishops and Clergy do inform us, which cannot be done, considering the Corruption of Men, and the Subtlety, Malice, and Diligence of Adversaries, the penal Statutes being removed, seeing these add Force to all Laws, and if wanting, will render them ineffectual and contemptible.

610. It was the Love of God's Honour and the true Religion and Zeal for them, and to secure the Nation against Idolatry, Treason and Rebellion, Heresy and antichristian Tyranny and Superstition, and from Apostacy, and the Preservation of our Lives, Liberties and Estates, against the Enemies of our Religion, which were the Reasons of these Laws, which may be seen by the reading of them; if we then shall consent to the Removal of them against these Crimes, and for securing these greatest Concerns, what Crime may not pass unpunished? and what of our greatest Interests shall be secured? This were indeed, not only a condemning of our Kings and Parliaments since the Reformation, but a most remarkable falling from our first Love, wherefore God might justly remove the Candlestick out of its Place, and give us up to all the Abominations and Delusions of the Man of Sin.

710. To consent to the taking away of the penal Statutes against Papists, removes all the Security we have in Law for our Religion; for the first Acts, which are the second and third of Parliament first, Jam. VI. establishing our Religion and Confession, are penal against the Enemies of it, (to wit the Papists) as often, if not always, our Laws call them, and all the rest are penal, as any indifferent Reader may see, who shall be at the Pains to read them; and so we consent to abolish utterly the Protestant Religion in Scotland, for there is no other Law before these for our Religion, and likewise we establish Popery by Law, and all its Abominations and Tyranny, for all preceeding Laws now extant, are only in favours of Popery, which who can think upon without Horror and Astonishment?

To conclude all our Reasoning, what Dishonour would it bring to almighty God, if Scotland, who hath been so much obliged to him for his precious Ordinances in so much Purity and Plenty, and hath so much professed to be for him, and his Truth and Way, and is so solemnly tied to him and his Way, by such sacred and frequent Oaths, should, by their consenting to this, betray his Interests, might not he say as in Micah 6 and 9. O my People, what have I done unto thee, wherein have I wearied thee, testify against me. And Jerem. Chap. 2. ver. 10 and 11. Pass over to the Isles of Shittim, &c. And might he not drive us out of his House for Wickedness, and love us no more, and give us a Bill of Divorcement for ever? And what Infamy would it leave upon our Nation for ever, as the most foolish, unconstant and perfidious People that ever the World bore, and how hardning would it prove to our Enemies in their abominable Way, and what Encouragement would it give to them, who are diligent, numerous, subtil and malicious, set on Work by the Devil to improve this, to destroy the true Christian Religion, and Adherers thereto, and to advance and secure all the Abominations of Antichrist? and what Ruin is like to come upon our Souls eternally, and the Souls of our Posterity, by the Contagion of these abominable Delusions? and what intolerable Sting would it leave in the Consciences of such as are guilty of this, through Fear, Ambition, Covetousness, or any other corrupt Principle, in the Day when God shall reckon with them? and what a flying Roll of God's Wrath and Curse will enter into their Houses, and pursue them and theirs? Zech. 5. 1. But if these Considerations, which are most weighty, should be laid aside, yet let all consider, who will in Reason credit such who are treacherous in these weighty Matters, will such as are false to God, be true to Man? Their Adversaries shall have all Places of Trust and Preferment; the Church-lands shall be rent from them, their Lives, Liberties and Estates shall be ruined, if they do not list themselves under the Banner of Antichrist. The sad Condition of the Reformed in France at the present, and the Cruelties exercised in Hungary and in the Vallies of Piedmont, and what they have cruelly and barbarously done, even above the pagan Persecution in these Places formerly, and in the Netherlands, Bohemia, Moravia, Cilicia, in Ireland of late, in Britain in the Days of both the Maries Reigns, and wherever they have Power, may cause us be wary, lest by our Folly, Timorousness, &c. we bring these Barbarities upon our selves, and utter Destruction.

It any should say, it is the King's Pleasure, that we should evidence our Loyalty in this. It is answered, His Majesty's Pleasure is publicly declared already, which is to secure the Protestant Religion in this Nation, both while he acted as Commissioner in the Parliament abovementioned, and since he came to the Crown in this Parliament current; and therefore this is to be constructed to be a Temptation from the Enemies of our Religion, who will incessantly labour to induce him to alter his royal Resolution and Promise, which we hope shall remain inviolable, notwithstanding all their Assiduosity and Cunning, considering his Magnanimity and Fidelity, which will indeed prove more miraculous (he being stedfast) than all the Miracles that that Church hath wrought and boasted of, since ever it turned antichristian, considering his near, manifold, and strong Temptations; but he will owe nothing of this to them, but to the Goodness of God in the royal Temper of his Spirit. 2do. His Majesty is wise, and knows that the best of Laws cannot be secured by Men, without Penalties, as our Lives, Liberties, Estates, cannot be secured without them, and therefore are secured to us, viz. by penal Statutes. 3tio. His Majesty is more princely, than to counsel, let be to command, far less compel his loyal Subjects, to act contrary to the solemn Oaths made in his own Presence and allowed by him, and in doing so, consent to their own Ruin, and to the Ruin and Destruction of all that is dearest to them: And further in such a Case as this, when Sin is commanded, all faithful Subjects to God, and truly loyal to the King, ought to fear him more that can kill, and cast Soul and Body in Hell-fire, than the greatest of Monarchs, who when they kill the Body, have no more they can do. Luke 12. 5. To finish this Objection, his Majesty in his way was constant against the Laws established, and his royal Brother's Command, supposing it would have been Sin in him to obey, much more ought we, having the Law of God, of the Church, and the Laws of the Land, confirmed by himself, and having his Example to countenance us to be steadfast, considering how much it concerns the Glory of God and all our Interests, spiritual, temporal and eternal.

If it be said that it is his Majesty's Tenderneſs to theſe of his own Religion, that they may be ſecured from ſanguinary Laws, that moves him to recommend this to his Parliament. Answer. His Majesty knows, his Tenderneſs is to be extended to all his Subjects, who are under his royal Care, as well as to them, and we truſt he will do it, eſpecially ſeeing all but Papiſts are under God and his Son, immediately ſubjected to him, and own no other Supreme over theſe Nations, but himſelf alone. 2do. We truſt his Majesty's Tenderneſs to them, will not claſh with his Fidelity and Tenderneſs to us, in his engaging to defend the Proteſtant Religion, which cannot be done by Men, without the penal Statutes, eſpecially ſeeing the Laws are ſo much ſlighted, as the Maſs, which by our Law is Idolatry and Treason, hath been of late frequented openly in the chiefſt City of our Nation. 3tio. It is evident whereſoever the Popiſh Party prevails, they endeavour undarely to ruine us and our Religion together, and all our Concerns, as does appear by the cruel Maſſacres they have made, their bloody Inquiſitions and Perſecutions: Now to take away the penal Statutes, is to open a Door to their Preferment and Power, to uſe us after the ſame Manner, which cannot in Reaſon be conſented unto, ſeeing the ſecond Lateran Council cauſes take an Oath of all in Power in Church and State, to extirpate Hereticks (as they judge us to be) and that under the Pain of Excommunication, &c. if they be negligent. We truſt alſo, his Majesty's Tenderneſs will not be ſmall to his Succeſſors, who, if they be Proteſtants, may expect no eaſy Entry to the Crown, if they have Power, conſidering their Engagements to the Pope, and what Encouragement they may have from abroad. And finally, his Majesty knows, whatever Kindneſs he ſhew them, that it were very unreaſonable, and againſt all Religion and Honesty, by his Subjects of the Proteſtant Religion conſenting to what is deſired, to bring themſelves under manifold Perjuries, and in doing ſo, to put their Religion, Lives, Liberties and Eſtates in their Hands, from whom they may expect ſo little Favour; for Experience hath proved, notwithſtanding all the penal and ſanguinary Laws they ſpeak of, there hath not been ſo much as one Papiſt ſince the Reformation, who did ſuſter Lots of Lite or Limb merely for his Religion, and they are authorized by the Lateran Council, which they own as infaillible, to deſtroy us, and are daily praſtiſing accordingly, where they ever prevail, or have Power.

It may be objected by ſome, that our Religion is a holy and meek Religion, and needs not thoſe penal and ſanguinary Laws to defend it, and its Profeſſors; for the Author of it will defend them, and theſe Laws are inconfiſtent with the Spirit of our Religion, which is a Spirit of Meekneſs. It is answered, that our Religion is that of our Lord Jeſus, and he will own it, and defend it, altho' all ſhould forſake it; yet we judge the Goſpel doth not deſtroy the Light and Law of Nature, which teacheth all to ſecure their Religion by penal Statutes; and it were a Shame to be careleſs for the Security of our Religion, which is the only true one in the World, than Papiſts or Heathens do for their Deluſions, and would diſcover our undervaluing and Contempt of it. 2do. The Scripture gives Inſtance of penal Statutes or Laws, againſt Idolaters, in the Old Teſtament, and Church Officers are reproved, in the New, for not cenſuring corrupt Doctrines and Errors in the Church: And it is foretold in Times of Reformation, That the Kings of the Earth ſhall hate the Whore of Babylon, and eat her Fleſh, and burn her with Fire. Revel. xvii. 16. and therefore theſe penal Statutes are conſiſtent with the Spirit of the Goſpel. 3tio. Seeing the defending of our Lives, Liberties, Eſtates, our Chaſtity, Names, the Perſons of Biſhops, Miniſters, by penal Statutes, is conſiſtent with the Spirit of the Goſpel, is the Proteſtant Religion the only Thing that concerns ſo little, that it ſhould be defended by theſe? and are theſe inconfiſtent with the Spirit of the Goſpel, when they are made for its Defence? it is abominable to ſay ſo. 4to. Is it conſiſtent with the Spirit of the Goſpel to bring our ſelves under manifold Perjuries, and only to ruine our Religion, and Souls, and Bodies, and Poſterity, and all that is dear to us, by conſenting to remove theſe penal Laws, ſeeing the Goſpel commands us to be wiſe as Serpents, and harmleſs as Doves? 5to. If God brings Suffering upon us, he will give us Grace to bear it, while we are in the Way of Duty; but if we bring Suffering upon our ſelves, we cannot, in ſo doing, expect his Aid and Protection, eſpecially if we conſent to the Removal of all theſe Hedges, by which our Religion hath been fenced ſince the Reformation, for, in ſo doing, we betray our Religion, the Proteſtant Succeſſor, and deſtroy our ſelves and the ſucceeding Generation, as much as in us lies, and ſhall leave our Names as a Curſe to God's Chosen; and if theſe Things conſiſt with a Goſpel Spirit, let any judge.

So it is eaſy to conclude, that none can conſent to the taking away of theſe penal Statutes, but theſe who are already Citizens of Babylon, and have drunk the Cup of that Whore, except it may be a cruel Haman, or a cunning ſelf-ſeeking Ahithophel in the Court, or a curſed Achan in the Camp, bewitched with the Wedge of Gold and Babylonish Garment, or a Judas in the Church, who betrays his Maſter with a Kiſs, for a little Money or Preferment; but God forbid that any of our dear Countrymen, ſhould be of that execrable Number, whoſe Wickedneſs paſſeth Expreſſion, and whoſe Punishment ſhall be inevitable, and, beyond all human Comprehension, intolerable and dreadful to all Eternity.

Reasons for abrogating the penal Statutes. N<sup>o</sup>. CXVIII.

THIS moderate Favour being propoſed and deſired by the King's moſt excellent Maſteſty, and the Eſtates of Parliament having in their loyal and dutiful Return to his gracious Letter, promiſed to go as great Length to eaſe his Roman Catholick Subjects, as their Conſciences will allow; it becometh the Duty of all concerned, to inform themſelves, and to clear and ſatisfy their own Conſciences concerning this Matter, that ſo far as may be done without ſinning againſt God, they may yield a dutiful Compliance with his Maſteſty's Deſires, and by ſo doing, procure from ſo generous a Prince, the more kindly Protection and Security for our national Church, and the reformed Proteſtant Religion therein. In order to this, it will be neceſſary to premiſe ſome few Rules or Grounds, in which all will acquieſce for founding theſe Reaſons, which may perſwade us to conſent to the moderate Eaſe and Favour propoſed. As, 1700. That cannot bind the Conscience as a divine Law, which neither directly, nor by clear Consequence is founded on the Doctrine or Practice of Christ, or his Apostles, or of the primitive Church.

1mo. That

2do. That which merely obligeth by a human Law, may be changed when the Reason of the Law ceaseth; yea, it ought to be altered in human and Christian Prudence, when either it becomes inconvenient, or hinders a greater Good, or occasions a greater Evil.

310. No Oath whatsoever can bind or oblige to that which is sinful or unlawful to be done.

410. If a Man hath sworn to perform an Action, and upon a new Emergent, the Performance thereof should become the Breach of a prior Oath, or of a greater Duty, the Obligation must needs cease, else the Oath should prove vinculum iniquitatis.

510. If one swear to do such an Act, or not to do such an Act, as a Mean for a greater End, to which the Oath principally relates, if that Mean become hurtful and destructive for the End, the Oath becometh so far from Obligation, that the Mean changeth its Nature, the Obligation to do such an Act, and is quite taken off, and ceaseth; no Man being bound to destroy the End, by adhering to a Mean now become destructive thereof.

610. If one hath sworn to do nothing to the Hurt or Prejudice of a Person, or an Institution not to consent thereunto, this must be understood of such Prejudices, as by their own Nature and necessary Effect, are hurtful to that Person or Institution. Ex. gr. If one in Britain were sworn to do no Prejudice to a Nobleman in Sweden, nor to consent thereto, (which may be a very lawful Oath) in case of a War betwixt Denmark and Sweden, should it be thought a Breach of that Oath in the Britain, to sell Corn to the King of Denmark for entertaining his Army, which is warring against all the Swedes, and that Nobleman amongst the rest, and so to concur for entertaining these, that may and will endeavour to kill him? In like Manner, if I were sworn to do my best Endeavour to keep a Church from being burned, and may do nothing which may occasion its being fired, will this oblige me to destroy my House which is adjacent to it, lest by chance it may occasion the firing of that Church, or to endeavour to hinder my Neighbour from building his own Ground near unto it, upon the like Jealousy?

710. Kings in Scotland were before Parliaments; and then all the legislative, as well as executive Power, did reside sovereignly in them, and therefore Parliaments have no more Power nor Authority, but what our Kings have derived unto them; so that what the King hath not given, but retained, cannot be invaded, usurped, nor resisted, without the highest Crime against the Sovereign.

810. As it is absurd in Logick, to argue from a particular to a general, or universal, so it will be unjust in Policy, from the Fault and Guilt of some particular Persons, or particular Trades or Orders of Men, to conclude the whole Kingdom, or other different Societies and Orders of Men in it; guilty of that Fault or Crime.

Now from these foregoing Grounds or Maxims, which seem clear and plain beyond all rational Hesitation or Doubt, it may be argued in the present Case,

First. That for a Christian Magistrate to take away the Life or Estate of a Subject, who is not guilty of Sedition or Rebellion, nor of injuring the Person, Goods, or Fame of any of his Neighbours, but is quiet and peaceable, and contents himself in the private Exercise of his own Religion, merely for Difference of Opinion, and private Exercise thereof, without disturbing others, to do so, is neither founded directly, nor by any clear Consequence, on the Doctrine or Practice of our Saviour, nor of his Apostles, nor of the primitive Church, yea, nor on the Doctrine or Practice of the Christian Church in following Ages, who never urged or persuaded their Kings and Emperors, when the Empire became Christian, to take away the Lives and Fortunes of open Infidels and Heathens, who were avowed Worshipers of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, and of all Manner of Idols, of Stocks and Stones, altho' these idolatrous Heathens, when they had Authority and Power, did rob, murder, and execute all Manner of Cruelty against the Christians. Our blessed Jesus taught no such Doctrine, but contrariwise, rebuked the Fieriness and Violence of his Two Disciples, who would needs imitate Elijah, in calling for Fire from Heaven to destroy the schismatical Samaritans, who were actually injuring and affronting the Saviour of the World, assuring them, that this their cruel and fierce Motion was utterly repugnant to his blessed Temper, and to the meek Spirit of his Gospel; but if the first Position or Maxim be good, then the Argument sufficiently evinceth, that we are not bound by any divine Law, not to consent to allow these of the Popish Religion to enjoy their Lives and Estates, notwithstanding of their Difference in Religion, and of their worshipping after the Romish Manner in their private Houses.

If it be said, that our Law calls Papists Idolaters, and the Mass Idolatry, and that by the Law of God Idolaters are to be put to Death, Deut. 13. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, &c. and Chap. 17. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. Exod. 22. 20. It may be answered, 1700. That these political and judicial Laws, relating to the Pains and Punishments of Crimes, did only oblige the Jews, being most of them calculated for their Estate and Policies, and lay no Bond nor Obligation on Christian Magistrates, to proceed and punish after their Form and Manner. All Christian Magistrates do punish Thieves with Death, whom the judicial Law of Moses did only condemn to Restitution of the Double, or of the Quadruple, and so consider themselves not to be under the Direction, much less under the Obligation of the foresaid judicial Law. 2do. The Idolaters, who by the judicial Law of Moses were to be put to Death, were only such as made Defection from the true and living God of Israel, to the worshipping of the Sun, and other Planets, and Idols of the Canaanites and Heathens, as appears in Deut. 13. 5. and 17. 3. Now the Papists acknowledge and own the God of Israel to be the true God, and abhor the Worship of Sun, Moon, and Stars, and of the other Idols of the Heathens; and it is not lawful to extend penal and sanguinary Laws to any, but to such against whom they were directly, and in terminis designed and intended; lest if way be given to proceed in the Execution of such Laws, by remote and obscure Consequences and Inferences, ill-natured and cruel Judges shall never want a Pretence of hurting and destroying the innocent or less guilty. 310. When Idolatry was not in the Object of worshipping an Idol, but only in the Mode and Manner of worshipping the true God by an Image, the Law for putting the Idolater to Death was never executed for that Crime, even in the Commonwealth of the Jews. The Dauides sinned grievously, who took Micah's Image, and worshipped by it, and set up Priests, by whom they performed that Worship, as is to be read the 17 and 18 Chapters of Judges, this being directly against the second Command of the Decalogue, yet because they intended by that Image to worship the true God, who brought brought them out from Egypt, they were not reckoned to be amongst the Worshippers of other Gods, nor such Idolaters as, in Construction of the Law of Moses, were to be punished by Death, nor did the remanent Tribes conspire or make War against them, to punish them, or to exterminate that idolatrous Manner of Worship, as the Jews Law commanded, to do to such as worshipped the Idols and Gods of the Gentiles and Heathens; and as they actually did in avenging the Injury done by some of the Tribe of Beniamin to the Levite's Wife, Judg. 19. 20, 21. which yet was a lesser Crime than downright and gross Idolatry; and as they purposed and intended to do against the Tribes of Reuben and Gad, and half Tribe of Manasse, whom they thought to be designing Defection and Revolt from the true God of Israel, by setting up an Altar on the other Side of Jordan, different from the Altar which was in the Tabernacle; and yet this way of Worship by Altar's Image, continued amongst the Danites all the while that the House of God was in Shiloh, and Jonathan the Son of Gershom was Priest for that Service, Judg. 18. 30, 31. this was near 300 Years. And like to the Fact of the Danites, was the Deed of Jeroboam, in setting up the Calves at Dan and Bethel, that by them the Israelites might worship God, which was also directly against the Second Commandment fore-said; and yet God did prohibit his People, who continued firm in their Religion, and abhorred that idolatrous Manner of worshipping God, to punish or make War against the Ten Tribes for so doing, 1 Kings 12. 24. It is also a Consideration worth observing, that even these Canaanitish Nations, whom God devoted to Destruction, and whom he commanded the Israelites to extirpate, were not so plagued merely for their Idolatry, tho' of the most gross and abominable Sort, but also for their other enormous Crimes, and crying Sins, as appears from God's suspending the Destruction of the Amorites, because their Iniquity was not yet full, tho' their Idolatries were long before come to the greatest Height: But finally, whatever may be in this, it is most certain, that the Sentiments of our Princes and Magistrates have agreed in this, that for the private Worshippings of Papists, whatsoever Kind of Superstition or Idolatry they stand guilty of, no Person hath been put to Death since the Beginning of our Reformation, nor would the severest amongst us at this Day consent to punish any Papist with Death and Forfeiture, for worshipping in private, without traffick-ing to the Disturbance of the Peace, or to the perverting or seducing his Majesty's good Subjects from their Religion and Allegiance; and therefore it seems rather the Effect of the Humour, than the Dictate of Con-science, not to consent to the Suspension of Laws, as useless as hard; and to the Execution whereof they who clamour most would never agree.

No Obligation then appearing for the Execution of Severity against Papists, for the Exercise of their private Worship, from any divine Law, we would in the next Place consider the human Laws which may bind us to it; and if we look at the Time when they were made, it will be clear that then there was great and apparent Danger from the Papists, not only to our reformed Religion, which was but newly established, but also to the Monarchy and Government, both of Church and State; for then they were, through a Mis-take or Dispute concerning the Person in which the Sovereignty was lodged, whether in King James VI. or his Mother Queen Mary, contriving Sedition and Rebellion, and to raise War, both intestine and to-reign, so that at that Time there was good and solid Reason for framing and enacting those Laws against them: And therefore from the Second Position the Reason ceasing, and the Papists being now quiet and peaceable, and we out of all reasonable Fears of their plotting or contriving against the King and Govern-ment, in this Reign, all Dispute concerning the Subject of the Sovereignty being now (blessed be God) out of Doors, they may be allowed to enjoy their Lives and Estates, notwithstanding of the Exercise of their Worship in private Houses; and the Laws striking against them, may, in so far as relates to that private Worshipping, be suspended as to any Execution; especially while we consider, that when the Reformation was but in its Infancy, and the Papists much more numerous and dangerous, and no Experiment given of their active Loyalty and Obedience, yet no Execution passed then nor ever since, against any of them for private Worship; and to fancy that to be necessary now, which was never executed, (no not in Times of greatest Danger) is an Evidence of some greater Inclination to gratify Humour and Contention, than to submit and acquiesce in the moderate Desires of a most gracious King. Again, by refusing to suspend that Execution of Severities and Penalties, in taking away the Lives and Fortunes of peaceable Papists, merely for the Ex-ercise of their Worship in private Houses, greater Danger and Inconveniencies shall be brought on our Church, and the Protestant Religion, in so far as this will raise in the King's Breast more Prejudices against both, and beget Unkindness to such as deny his Majesty this moderate Favour to those of his own Perswasion, which cannot prove safe, but very hurtful and inconvenient to both our Church, Religion, and our selves; and by denying our Consent to this moderate Ease, instead of acting for Preservation of our Religion, we ex-pose it to eminent and apparent Danger, and so do inconsiderately run upon the Rock which we desire to shun and avoid. Further, to refuse to consent to suspend the Execution of Laws against peaceable Papists, for their private Worshipping, which have never been, nor (in the Judgment of any sober Person) ought ever to be executed, will not only prove inconvenient, and hinder greater Good that might redound to our Church and Protestant Religion, by his Majesty's Grace and Goodness, (he being gratified in his moderate Desires) but will occasion several great and dangerous Evils to our Religion, as the provoking the King by such un-accountable Obstinacy, to make greater Changes amongst his Servants, Officers, Ministers, and Judges, than otherwise he intends, which he may legally do, all those Offices being granted to such as possess them, only during his Royal Will and Pleasure. Again, what Changes and Alterations may this unreasonable Stiffness induce his Majesty to make in the external Government of the Church, and of its Bishops and or-thodox Ministers, to the apparent Hurt and Danger of the Protestant Religion, is clear and manifest to any who will be at the Pains to read and ponder his Majesty's Supremacy, as it is asserted by the first Act, Sess. 1. Parl. 2. King Charles II. Anno 1669. And the Hazard to our national reformed Religion, from the Changes and Alterations his Majesty may make in these, is a thousand Times greater, than can be by permitting peaceable Papists to enjoy their Estates and Lives, notwithstanding of the Exercise of their private Worship, which they have done ever since the Reformation, without any Hazard of our own Religion; so that these, who refusing what they may grant without Danger, do draw a great and inevitable Danger and Prejudices to our Religion, contrary to the Intendment and Design of our Oath in the Test, and all our other Obliga-tions, which bind and oblige us to its Preservation. Nor do I see how it is possible to avoid the Scandal of having that impious and unreasonable Tenet and Position, of sounding Dominion and Right of Property in Grace, charged upon us, if we assert the very Lawfulness of taking away the Lives and Estates of Papists, merely merely for their Opinions and Religion, and private Worshippings, which yet is a wild fanatical Doctrine, frequently condemned in Scripture, and reprobated by all reformed Churches. Was not the Cruelty and Severity of the Romish Church, against those who differed in Opinion and Religion from them, and yet lived quietly and peaceably, one of the Impieties and greatest Immoralities we justly charge upon them; and on which, amongst other Things, we founded our Separation from them? and is it possible, without Scandal and just Reproach, to maintain and justify by our Law, what we declared impious in the Practice? This indeed could not be pleaded, when these severe Laws were made against Papists at the Beginning of our Reformation, because they were libelled against their seditious and treasonable Designs and Practices, (which proceeded mainly upon the forementioned Mistake or Dispute) rather than against their religious Sentiments and Worship; for the Papists were then seditious, and the Priests trafficked for foreign Invasions, and preached open Treason, stirring up the Subjects against the King, which now none can pretend to be our Case: And how can we condemn the Persecution in France, or the French King's Method in forcing Mens Consciences, and obliging them to part with their Religion by Dragoons, and all Manner of Cruelties, whereby he reduces peaceable Subjects to the greatest Miseries and Hardships, because they differ from his Religion? May not that persecuting Prince justly upbraid us, as forcing the peaceable Subjects of his Persecution, and violenting their Consciences, by taking away the Lives and Fortunes, or continuing Laws against them for so doing, merely for their private Worship, according to their Consciences, tho' they are quiet, loyal, and peaceable in all their Practices and Demeanors?

From the Fourth Position or Maxim, it may be further argued, that by refusing to consent to this moderate Ease to Papists, a most dangerous, and almost incurable Blow and Wound may be occasioned to the Protestant Church and Religion; for if the King please, (and if he be irritated and provoked, it is hard to say what his Majesty will do) he may, without violating of any Law, at one Stroke, remove all Protestant Officers and Judges from the Government of the State, and all Protestant Bishops and Ministers from the Government of the Church, and so the whole Government both of Church and State, may come to be lodged in the Hands of such as cannot be judged so friendly to the Protestant Interest; and is not the Extradition of Protestants from all Power or Authority, either in Church or State, a greater Hurt and Prejudice to our Religion, than any Thing that can ensue upon a few Papists enjoying their Estates and Lives? Nay, and what if his Majesty should proceed, upon this just Provocation, to fill all those Places with Papists? if he should, we must submit, and are tied by our Principles and Religion not to resist, it being a chief and essential Position in our holy Religion, to render active, or (where we cannot do that) passive Obedience to the supreme Magistrate; and howbeit Danger should arise to these Papists, who should embrace and exercise these Offices and Employments upon some Events; yet this will neither remedy the Prejudices, which in the mean while are done to the Church and the Protestant Religion, nor indeed excuse us from the Guilt and Crime of hazarding and hurting our Religion, in so far as we unnecessarily give any Occasion for it. As for such, who in a morose Humour please themselves, by saying, if we consent not, it is no Act of ours, it is the King's, let him look to it, albeit, as is said, by doing what we safely may, the Evil may be prevented or lessened. Let us consider how opposite this is to Christian Prudence, which, in many Cases, is more our Duty than either Force or mistaken Zeal, which oftner burns than enlightens or warms.

According to the first Position or Maxim, it may be thus argued, that tho' the Oath of the Test did, by a hidden or remote Inference or Consequence, bind us up, or oblige us to refuse to grant this moderate Ease desired by the King, in favours of his Popish Subjects, as believing, that the keeping up of the vigorous Execution of Laws against Papists, even for their private Worshippings, is one of the Means for preserving of the Protestant Religion, yet this Mean becoming hurtful and destructive to the great End, viz. the Security and Preservation of our Protestant Church and Religion, the Obligation of the Oath, as to that Mean, would seem necessarily to be loosed, especially when our Obligation by the Test to this Mean, is at best very dubious and uncertain, it being so very remote a Mean, (if any at all) that it needs Three or Four Inferences, ere it can be forced to have any Kind of Contingency, for serving and promoting the great End designed by the Oath of the Test: But let us ponder impartially the grand Scruple arising from the Test, and we shall see it founded on these Words in it, (and shall never consent to any Change or Alteration contrary thereto) from which some infer, that we are sworn against granting our Consent to suffer any Papists to enjoy their Lives and Estates, if they exercise their Worship in private Houses; but when these Words are seriously considered, it will appear, first, that the Change and Alteration sworn against, is the Change and Alteration of the Protestant Religion itself, or of any of the necessary and essential Doctrines of the Protestant Faith and Religion, as the Words themselves, being referred either to the antecedent or consequent Clauses in the Oath of the Test, do with sufficient Evidence import; for this Change must be directly contrary to the forementioned Religion, pointed at by the Particle (thereto) and the subsequent Words, I renounce all such Doctrines, Principles, &c. popish or fanatical, which are contrary to, and inconsistent with the said Protestant Religion, &c. do, with great Evidence, point out the Alteration sworn against, to be an Alteration of the Protestant Doctrines and Principles. Now, none will imagine, that to consent to the Papists enjoying their Lives and Estates, as aforesaid, is to grant Consent to the Alteration of our reformed Religion, or any essential Doctrine thereof; indeed, it is so far from being an essential or necessary Article, Principle, or Doctrine of the Protestant Religion, to make our own Laws for taking away the Lives of any peaceable Subject, for his private Opinion in Religion, or private Practice in Worship, that it will rather appear on the other Side, to be one of these Popish or fanatical Principles and Doctrines, which, by the Oath of the Test, we are bound to renounce and disown. To own this Principle to be a Part of our Religion, were to misrepresent our peaceable, holy, innocent, meek Protestant Religion, as the most cruel and sanguinary Institution in the World, and to condemn all our excellent and wise Predecessors the Reformers, who never put in Execution, even in the Times when the Papists were most numerous and formidable, and most active in their Plottings and Conspiracies against our Religion and Government, (upon the Mistake aforesaid) those Laws called penal or sanguinary, for the private Exercise of their Worship in Houses. 2do. By the consenting to the Immunity of Papists, from the Execution of these Laws, we do not consent to take away, repeal, or abrogate any Law, penal or sanguinary, whatsoever, (these standing still on the File unrepealed) so that by this Consent we do not allow the Alteration or repealing of any Law whatsoever, but only grant to a few Popish Subjects, such a small and inconsiderable Immunity, as hath in all former Reigns Reigns been granted and indulged to them by our wise and religious Predecessors; and which, even the most scrupulous themselves, in their private Sentiments, think, ought not to be put in Execution against them, as they believe they will never be called in question, nor punished for their private Worship in any subsequent Reign: But 3<sup>tho</sup>. Admit this to be a Consent to some Change and Alteration about the Laws relating to the Protestant Religion, yet it is such a Change and Alteration, as is not contrary nor prejudicial to its Security, Interest, or Preservation; but is indeed advantageous and beneficial to it, and preservative of it, in so far as, by yielding our Consent, we shew our Loyalty and Duty to the King, by an humble Compliance with his moderate Desires, in favours of a few Subjects of his own Perswasion, which will incline his sacred Majesty generally to protect our established Religion and Church, without suffering any Encroachment upon, or Violation of them; whereas, by refusing our Consent to his Majesty's moderate Desires, we shall evidently hurt our Religion; by endeavouring to maintain an impracticable Mean to support it, and so while we seem to hate Popery, we become truly unkind to the Protestant Religion.

The Sixth Maxim or Position seems an irrefragable Truth, else most absurd Consequences might be bound upon us, from all promissory Oaths. If the Test should be extended as some would, then one could not give Charity to a starving Papist, for hereby he might be helped, and even, by saving his Life, we might reserve one who would prejudge our Religion, and is it not as great a Breach of Christian Charity to take a Man's Estate from him, as to refuse to give him a Part of mine? No Protestant, having sworn the Test, should swear, lie, steal, commit Adultery, &c. nor indeed commit any Kind of Immorality, in Commission whereof there is Wickedness and Guilt enough: But perhaps it was not till now discovered, that the Guilt of Perjury is superadded to every one of these Sins and Crimes in any one who hath taken that Oath; for, by these Sins and Immoralities, great Prejudice is done to, and great Scandal is brought upon the Protestant Religion, and indeed the practising them is more hurtful to our holy Profession, than to consent that a peaceable Papist be suffered to live and enjoy his Estate beside us, who perhaps makes Conscience to avoid such scandalous and uncontroverted Breaches of the moral Law; indeed it is sad to find Fancy and Humour straining after such rude and unnatural Consequences, and gilding them over with the fair Pretence of Scruples of Conscience.

The Seventh Proposition or Ground is mentioned to put all in Mind of their Obligations to give Submission when the King exercises what he legally may by his Prerogative, and from thence to consider how much we are bound by Christian Prudence, and even, for the sake of Our Religion, not to provoke the King's Majesty, either to hurt us, or to be unkind to us, or to alienate him more from that Religion which he offers graciously to protect, and which Grace we ought not to requite by urging the keeping up of Severities against those of his own Religion, which we our selves say we would abhor to execute, if we could, and which we cannot, if we would, until first we renounce Obedience to God's Command, and Submission to our sovereign Magistrate, by resisting, if not overthrowing his sacred Authority and Power.

And since none can suspect this loyal Parliament, nor any Member of it is guilty of the least Tendency to such seditious Practices, they having so signally testified their Abhorrence of them, and are amongst the happy Instruments which have suppressed them and others; yet since the Beginnings of Evils are often small, when their Growth and Events may prove fatal, and that as certainly as great Mischiefs must needs arise from the least Appearance of Unkindness betwixt the King and his Parliament, and that these will be a Curse to Posterity, who shall contribute the least Accession to it. And on the other Hand, that the Spirit of Moderation becometh Christians, Calmness and Discretion become Subjects in all their Dealings with their Sovereign, and that the greater Invitations we give our King, by these Virtues, the greater Assurance we have of his Protection to our Religion; and that the Preservation of the present great Peace and Tranquillity which we enjoy, is a weighty Charge on the Conscience of every Man that is a Member of Parliament.

These Considerations, 'tis hoped, will move and prevail with all good Christians, all good Subjects, and all good Countrymen, to consent to the King's moderate Proposal and Desire abovementioned, which Ease to these of his own Religion, his Majesty may grant without our Consent; and yet, as a gentle and moderate Father and Governor, he desires to give it with the Consent of his Parliament. Let us not, by denying what we cannot hinder, lose the greatest Blessings and Happiness which we may retain, that King and People may still live in that happy and good Understanding, which may continue and crown the Sweetness and Easiness of his Royal Government over us, and of our Tranquillity, Property and Happiness under his Shadow.

It were to lose Time and Travel to answer to idle and frivolous Objections made and contrived against this Concession, founded very unchristianly on the Practice of the Jews against those Nations whom they were commanded to extirpate and root out, by immediate and express Precept, no more imitable than the stealing of the Egyptians Goods, no more binding by Command, than their other judicial Laws, which expired, as to their Obligation, with the Period of the Jewish Church and Policy, or rather than their extraordinary Actings upon immediate and extraordinary Commands, and even secret Impulses altogether become unwarrantable under the Gospel and Christianity, or from the impracticable, improbable and uncharitable May be's, that the Papists will dethrone the King, or cut our Throats, from which the Number and Practices in this Kingdom, with many other Specialities and Circumstances render us secure, besides, that all the Papists in this Kingdom (as is credibly informed) are ready to disclaim and renounce any deposing Doctrine or Canon, by the Court, or by the Church of Rome, as to Emperors or Kings, but it is not to be thought, that any thinking judicious or considering Man will be startled or amused with such weak, ill founded and inconcluding Arguments, especially when they shall put them in the Balance with the great and forcible clear Truths and Advantages which ly in the opposite Scale.

Answer to a Paper writ for abrogating the penal Statutes. No. CXIX.

Reflection I. IT is to be observed in general concerning that Paper, 1mo. That the Drift and Design thereof, it not of its Author, is a far more gross and horrid Thing, than he hath the Impudence or Boldness (tho' this be great enough) openly and professedly to own. To give Instance of this in a few Particulars. 1mo. He pretends, Pag. 7. Parag. 1. to plead not for taking away, repealing, or abrogating the penal Statutes against Papists, but only for a suspending of the Execution of them, and yet, in the very same Paragraph, he does more than tacitely insinuate, that the making or owning of those Laws is the Effect of a Popish or fanatical Principle, and a misrepresenting of the Protestant Religion, as the most cruel and sanguinary Institution in the World; and, Pag. 5. Parag. 1. he affirms, that the persecuting French Prince may justly upbraid us, as forcing peaceable Subjects, and violenting their Consciences, by keeping up Laws against them for their private Worship, &c. and, Pag. 3. Parag. 1. he calls the penal Statutes useless and hard; and, Pag. 6. Parag. 1. he asserts, that we cannot execute those penal Statutes, tho' we would, till first we renounce Obedience to God's Command, &c. and could any Papist more condemn these penal Statutes, as being most unjust and iniquitous in themselves, than this Author doth by these Expressions? Now if the presuming to interpret a Law, or Oath made by Law, to the Prejudice of its native Sense, was made a Ground of criminal Indictment, and Forfeiture of Life and Fortune, what deserves he who so basely slanders standing Laws, and also spreads abroad his gross Slanders thereof? 2do. He pretends only to give Reasons for allowing Papists the Exercise of their idolatrous Worship in private Houses. And 3tio. for allowing the private Exercise of their Worship only, who profess that they worship the true God; and yet by alledging, Pag. 2. that our blessed Jesus taught no such Doctrine, as that Kings and Emperors, when the Empire became Christian, should take away the Lives and Fortunes of open Infidels and Heathens, who were avowed Worshipers of the Sun, Moon and Stars, of Stocks and Stones, &c. and by drawing an Argument to preclude his Purpose from that Allegiance, and divers Things of that Nature, he does plainly plead for tolerating the most publick Practice of Idolatry, and of Idolatry committed against the first as well as second Command of the Decalogue. And if Brevity were not intended in thir Reflections, it were easy to make it out, that his other Arguments for allowing Papists the private Exercise of their idolatrous Religion, do, with equal Strength of Reason, militate for allowing the open and publick Exercise of heathenish Idolatry.

2do. It is to be observed in general anent that Paper, that the Author permits several (as he calls them) Rules or Grounds, and upon these he pretends to found his Reasons for perswading the Parliament to consent to what he pleads for, and after he hath set them down, he commends them as Maxims which seem clear and plain, beyond all real Hesitation or Doubt; whereby, to deceive the simple, he would have Men believe, that his Reasonings, in the Case he debates for, depend upon certain and indubitable Rules and Maxims, whereas his Inferences and Deductions from them, in so far as there is Truth in them, have no more Connection with them, nor Dependence upon them, than Darkness hath with and upon Light, or Falshood with and upon Truth, as is evident to any judicious Discerner, and shall afterwards be made to appear.

3tio. It is to be observed, that as he highly extols his own Reasonings, so he speaks contemptuously of the Reasons given against that he debates for, and Pag. ult. Par. ult. shamelessly misrepresents the same, saying, that they are founded very unchristianly on the Practice of the Jews against those Nations whom they were commanded to extirpate, &c. but what Person of any Judgment ever founded Reasons against granting an Immunity to the Practices of Idolatry, upon that Practice of the Jews? can the Author tell us of any?

Ref. II. If his first Position be compared with his Inferences therefrom, it is evident, that he asserts, that there is nothing in the Doctrine of Christ, of his Apostles, or of the primitive Church, for taking away the Life or Estate of Idolaters, for the Exercise of their idolatrous Worship: Which, if it were true, it would make no more for allowing the private Exercise of Idolatry (which is that our Author is Advocate for) than the publick Exercise thereof, there being as little in the Doctrine of Christ against allowing the publick as private Exercise of Idolatry: But that Assertion of the Author is manifestly false; for, by the Doctrine of the New, as well as Old Testament, the Magistrate beareth not the Sword in vain, for he is the Minister of God, a Revenger to execute Wrath upon him that doth Evil, Rom. xiii. 4. and Idolaters are ranked among the very chief of evil Doers, 1 Cor. vi. 9. Gal. v. 20, &c. and Rev. xvii. 16. John foretells it, as that which God requires of, and approves in the Kings of the Earth, in Times of Reformation, that they shall hate the Babylonish Whore, and make her desolate and naked — and shall burn her with Fire, a just Punishment upon her who made, and cruelly executed Laws, for burning to Death the innocent Saints of God. And tho' there were no such Passages in the New Testament, yet the Author's Argument would be wholly fallacious and inconcludent: For it might as well be argued, that Murder, Sodomy, Witchcraft, Incest, &c. are not punishable with Death, by any Law of God under the New Testament, since there are no penal Statutes against these Crimes, either expressly set down in the Doctrine of the New Testament, or by direct and immediate Consequence deducible therefrom: But as it is a sufficient Ground and Warrant from the Doctrine of the New Testament, for the capital punishing of these Abominations, so also for the capital punishing of Idolatry, that there is under the Old Testament, a clear Law of God grounded upon moral Equity for the capital punishing of the one as well as of the other. And Matth. v. 17. Our Saviour came not to destroy such Laws, but continues them in their full Authority and Vigour. And as for the Doctrine of the primitive Church, about the Punishment due to Idolaters, we may know what it was from the first Canon of the Ephesian Council, convened about the End of the Third Century, which expressly asserts, that Idolatry is crimen capitale, a capital Crime. But

Ref. III. To elude the Obligation of the Law of God, under the Old Testament, against Idolatry, the Author alledgeth Pag. 2. Par. 5. that it was only a political and judicial Law, which did oblige only the Jews, and was intended only against idolaters as made Defection from the true God, to the Worship of the Sun and other Planets, &c. and that it was

was never executed, even in the Commonwealth of the Jews, upon any who were guilty only of Idolatry, in the Mode and Manner of worshipping the true God by an Image, &c. Tho' this, which the Author says, were true, yet it would make Nothing for his Purpose, since it is irretragably made out by our Divines, both of old and of late, that Papists, by their worshipping a Peice of Bread, and other far more contemptible Objects than the Sun and Moon, or any of the Planets, are as guilty of Idolatry as the Heathens were, and do worship another than the true God no less than they did: But all which the Author, on this Head, saith, is palpably and notoriously false; for the Law of God, under the Old Testament, against Idolaters, is grounded upon such moral Equity, and immutable perpetual Reasons, as agree to the State of the Church under the New Testament, no less than to the State of the Church under the Old, as will be evident to any who shall read and consider the xiii and xvii Chapters of Deut. and Job xxxi. 28. Job, who was not under the judicial Law, nor acquainted with it, yet knew and affirms, that Idolatry is an Iniquity to be punished by the Judge, viz. because it is a denying of the God that is above, which Reason is perpetual and immutable, and holds true of the Popish as well as heathenish Idolatry, the former, as well as the latter, being, in the very Matter of Worship, a denying of the God that is above; so that the very Grossness of the Sin clearly determines the Punishment due unto it; the Law against Idolatry being manifestly of a moral Equity. What our Author affirms of the Nonexecution of it, under the Old Testament, against such Idolaters as professed that they still worshipped the true God, tho' it were true, it makes nothing for his Purpose, it being as conclusive for the open and publick, as private Practice of Idolatry, but besides, it is evidently false; for the Israelites, in their worshipping the golden Calf, professed that they worshipped the true God, Exod xxxii. 4. 5. and yet, ver. 28. at the Command of Moses their then Magistrate, there were about Three Thousand of them put to Death for that Sin: And the Jews, when they worshipped Baal, professed that they worshipped the true and living God of Israel, for it was him they called Baali in that Worship, Hos. ii. 16. and yet there are many known Instances of the Magistrate's punishing those Idolaters with Death, according to the Law. The Two Instances which our Author adduces to prove, by a new Kind of Logic, his vile Negative, that the Law was never execute against such Idolaters as professed that they worshipped the true God, not only prove not this, but are also nothing at all to his Purpose. His first Instance, of the other Tribes their not punishing the Danites for their Idolatry, in the Matter of Micah's Image, makes nothing for him, till he both prove that the Danites were then under the Jurisdiction of the other Tribes, and also if they were, that the other Tribes transgressed no Law of God, and did not sin by their not punishing the Danites, which he hath not proven, nor ever will. As little, and far less to his Purpose is his Second Instance, taken from the Lord's prohibiting the House of Judah and Benjamin to make War against the Ten revolted Tribes, 1 Kings xii. 24. for God did not prohibit them to make that War, as if it had been intended for punishing the Ten Tribes for their Idolatry, in the Matter of the Calves at Dan and Bethel, as this Author, to deceive the simple, shamelessly asserts; since the Text expressly says, that that War was intended to bring the Kingdom again to Rehoboam, 1 Kings xii. 21. and the Calves were not set up at Dan and Bethel, till after that intended War, 1 Kings xii. 25, 26, &c. But tho' the Practisers of that Idolatry professed that they worshipped the true God, yet, that it deserved capital Punishment, appears by King Josiah's offering, upon the Altar at Bethel, the Priests of the high Places, that burnt Incense thereon, and his causing Mens Bones to be burnt on it, according to what, long before that Time, had been foretold of that pious King and zealous Reformer, 1 Kings xiii. 2. with 2 Kings xxiii. 16. That which the Author alledges, Pag. 2. of the Kings and Emperors, when the Empire became Christian, that they took not away the Lives and Fortunes of open Infidels and Heathens, who were avowed Worshippers of the Sun, Moon and Stars, &c. tho' it were true, it makes nothing for what he undertakes to give Reasons for, it being as conclusive for allowing the publick as private Exercise of Idolatry, and of the very grossest Pagan Idolatry, as was before observed; and besides it makes nothing for this Author's Purpose, 1mo. because, at that Time, the Church was to be constitute and gathered out of the heathenish World. 2do. Because there were then no standing human penal Laws against Idolaters. And to argue from the Practice of the Magistrate in such a State of the Church, to what should be in the Practice of the Magistrate in a Church constituted, reformed, and having its Reformation fenced with human penal Laws of long standing and Continuance, is base and silly Sophistry. That which our Author further adds on this Head, Pag. 3. of the Execution of these penal Statutes, that no Person hath been put to Death, since the Beginning of our Reformation, for the private Worshippings of Papists (he might have added, nor for their publick Worshippings either) it is very easily discovered to be nothing for his Purpose, but to make very much against it. For 1mo. tho' the penal Statutes have not been execute upon Papists, yet there was not an Immunity granted to them by our pious and wise Predecessors in all former Reigns (as he shamelessly says there was) Pag. 7. Par. 1. For 2do. there is a great Difference betwixt the Nonexecution of a Law and the Magistrate's granting and indulging an Immunity to the Transgressors thereof. The Magistrate may be very tender of executing a penal Statute, while yet there are many and weighty Reasons why the Statute should continue in its full Force and Vigour, and without being any way innovated and restricted, and the present Case is a pregnant Instance of this: For tho' our Papists give out themselves to be, and this Pleader for Baal often insinuates, that they are not what they are in France, Savoy, Spain, &c. but meek Lambs, innocent and harmless Creatures (such as they were in the Reign of the Two Maries, and the Scottish Papists were, in corresponding with Spain, in the Time of the Armado and the English Papists in plotting the Gun-powder Treason, and the Irish Papist, in the cruel Massacre of Ireland) yet any reasonable Pretence they have for giving out themselves to be such meek-Lambs, or he, for insinuating that they are such, is, because these Foxes and Wolves have been, and are so chained up by our Laws, as to be incapable of doing us Hurt, without the Fear of being afterwards rewarded according to their Deeds; and the Continuance of those Laws in their full Force, hath been, and is an Aw-band upon them, to restrain them from seducing those of the reformed Religion, and from destroying our Kings when Protestant, our Religion, our Liberties, Estates and Lives, a Work which their Principles and antichristian Spirit strongly prompt them unto, and which accordingly they practise in all Places where they have the Power to do it, as they will quickly have in Scotland, tho' the penal Statutes be not taken away, if those Statutes be so innovated and restricted, as not only parliamtarily to allow them the Exercise of their idolatrous Religion, in private Houses, but also to put them under the Protection of his Majesty's Laws, yea, if the Execution of those Statutes be but by Law suspended. 2do. That the penal Statutes against Papists have not, since the Reformation, been executed, by putting any of them to Death, is so far from being an Argument for taking those Statutes away, or relaxing them, that it is a strong Argument to the contrary: For Protestants not being of that bloody Spirit, which is diffused through all the Members of Antichrist, have never set up any bloody Inquisition against Papists for the private Exercise of their Religion (as Papists do against Protestants: ) And it is the Way of Protestants, in Meekness, to endeavour the reclaiming of Papists, and to execute penal Statutes only upon Seducers to Popery, and such as, after due Means of Conviction used towards them, and after long Forbearance, remain altogether obstinate and irreclaimable; so that, from the standing of the penal Statutes against them, in their full Force, there is no Ground to fear, that any Cruelty, and unjust Severity shall be, by Protestants, exercised against them: And since Papists experimentally know this, they having had the private Exercise of their Religion, in all former Reigns, without the Forfeiture of the Life or Estate of any one of them, as far as this Author affirms, Pag. 7. Par. 1. and since also he, as Advocate for them, acknowledges, that the most scrupulous believe, that the Papists will never be called in question, or punished for their private Worship in any subsequent Reign, it must be some other Thing than the securing of themselves in the mere private Exercise of their Religion, which they design, by seeking with such Earnestness, by such various Arts and Methods, to have these penal Statutes taken away, or suspended in the Execution of them; and what that other Thing is, they hereby design, is in the present Circumstances, but too easy for any to understand, who will not wilfully shut his Eyes.

Ref. IV. While this Sophist pleadeth for the taking away, or legal suspending (which, upon the Matter, and in regard of Effects, will be nigh all one) the Execution of these penal Statutes, by affirming Pag. 4. Pag. 8. Par. 1. Pag. 3. Par. 2. that in the Judgment of any sober moderate Person, the Execution of these Laws never ought to be exacted, and that even the most scrupulous themselves, in their private Sentiments, think these Laws ought not to be put in Execution against Papists, and that Protestants themselves say, they would abhor the Execution of these Laws; and he does plainly accuse them as most unjust and abominable, tho' elsewhere, Pag. 5. Par. 1. he commends them, as having been enacted upon very necessary and good Grounds and Reasons: But tho' it be his Scope to render them detestable (any Commendation he gives of them being only to decline Envy) yet this is a silly Sophism to reach that Scope; for just to be might reason for taking away, or suspending the Execution of penal Statutes against Murderers, and other most criminal Offenders, because, when the Law is executed upon any such Persons, Men who retain human Bowels have a natural Abhorrence of the Misery the Malefactor suffers, as a Protestant would have of the Misery of a Papist, upon whom the Law is executed; but as in the former Case, so in this, there would be no Abhorrence of the Execution of the Law, as unjust.

Ref. V. Our Author argues (to purpose indeed, but nothing to his own Purpose, yea, very much against it) from the Cruelty and Severities of the Romish Church against Protestants; and to make his Argument the more pungent, he moves this Question, Pag. 5. Par. 1. Is it possible, without Scandal and just Reproach, to maintain and justify, by our Law, what we declare impious in their Practice? To which I return for Answer a few Questions. Do we declare it impious for the pious and zealous Kings of Judah to maintain and later, or are we Idolaters? Was it possible for the pious and zealous Kings of Judah to maintain and justify the Law of God, and their executing it against Idolatry, if they declared the Statutes of Omri, and of Ahab, and the cruel Execution thereof against the true Worshipers of God, to be impious? The Author's Question, if the Vigour be taken off it, is plainly this. Is it possible, without Scandal and just Reproach, to maintain and justify our penal Laws against Popish Idolaters, if we declare it impious in them to make and execute Laws for the cruel butchering of the innocent Saints of God, for nothing else but their owning and adhering to the true Worship of God? indeed the barbarous Cruelties, practised against such by Papists wherever they have Power, do not only justify our Law, but also do cry aloud for keeping it up in its full Vigour.

Ref. VI. The Oath of the Test, hath from Pulpits been cried up as an invincible Bulwark against Popery, and by the supposed Author of that Paper, as much as by any; it being very rationally presumed, that these who have taken an Oath, containing so clear and strong an Obligation, constantly to adhere to the Protestant Religion, and never to consent to any Change or Alteration contrary thereto, would never arrive to such an height of unparalleled Impudence and Debauchery, as to consent to the framing a Law tending to the Prejudice, far more to the overturning of the Protestant Religion. But now this Author hath fallen upon Methods to elude the so pregnant clear and strong Obligation of that Oath, and to play the Pope, by giving the Dispensation of his Sophisms, for loosing all the Obligation of that so solemn an Oath, and to make that Bulwark of the Protestant Religion, so often commended and celebrated as impregnable, to be no stronger than if it were made of Straw. For this end,

First. Having in the first Page of his Paper, laid down several Positions and Maxims (as he calls them) about an Oath, the chief of these he pitches upon for eluding the Obligation of the Test, is the fifth, viz. if one swear to do such an Act, or not to do such an Act, as a Means for a greater End, and to which the Oath principally relates; if that Mean become hurtful and destructive to the End, the Oath is so far from remaining obligatory, &c. This we admit in case the Mean, of and in it self, and intrinsically, become hurtful and destructive to the End, but not if it become hurtful and destructive thereunto, only extrinsically, occasionally and accidentally: Otherwise I should be free of my Oath of Allegiance given to my lawful Prince, when in the Case of an Usurper, who hath got the Power in his Hands, my Oath shall, from an extrinsic Cause, and accidentally become hurtful to the Ends I swear it for; and many such Instances may be given. Yea, if the Author's Position in the second Sense (which is the only Sense that makes for his Purpose) be admitted, it is the way to evacuate all Oaths. But we learn from the Scripture, Psal. 15. 4. that a conscientious Man, albeit he never swears to his own Hurt as the End, but does in swearing an Oath propose some Good to himself, yet when he hath by a lawful Oath engaged himself to that which accidentally turns to his Hurt, he notwithstanding changeth not. The Author's quibbling in his Position with the principal End of an Oath, is nothing to his purpose; for in the Oath of the Test, Mens principal End was, at least should have been the Glory of God, and he would pitch upon the Mean that is become destructive thereunto. Are the penal Statutes against Popery become destructive to the Glory of God?

The Author having taken the foresaid Position for the Major of his Argument, in the second Place, for eluding the Oath of the Test, he subsumes Page 6. Par. 2. That the keeping up of the vigorous Execution of the Laws against Papists, is become hurtful and destructive to the great End of the Oath of the Test. Whereas it is to be be noticed, that instead of saying, the keeping of the Laws against Papists, (which is the Thing in Controversy) the Sophist hath subtilly substitute the dead Child for the living, viz. the keeping up the Execution, and the rigorous Execution too of those Laws; albeit this be not the Thing in Controversy, and himself hath often harped upon this, that the Laws against Papists, not only are not, but also since the Reformation have not been at all executed against any one Papist: But the Subsumption he should here have made, is supplied from what he hath Page 4. where he hath a long Harangue (repeted again Page 5, Parag. 2.) upon the great Danger and Inconveniencies shall be brought on our Church and the Protestant Religion, by the Parliament's refusing to suspend the Execution of penal Statutes against Popery, and the only Proof of that great Danger, is drawn from what the King's Majesty may, and in Probability will do, if he be irritated by the Parliament's refusing to suspend the Execution of these Laws. For Answer, let it be considered, 1. That since his Majesty's high Commissioner came to Scotland, we have heard several Sermons preached before his Grace, and one of them by the supposed Author of the Paper now under Consideration; in all which Sermons we have been pathetically warned, to take heed of all Suspicions, Jealousies and Fears of his sacred Majesty, as tho', according to his Promise, he would not maintain and defend the Protestant Religion and Laws made in favours thereof: But now the Author of that Paper gives us the terrible Alarm, that there is no less Hazard than of Destruction it self to the Protestant Religion, if the Parliament relax not the Laws made for Defence of it, and do not (as Delilah dealt with Samson) cut off the annexed Penalties, wherein their Strength lies. 2. Let it be considered, that never any Prince was set forth under a worse Character than our Sovereign, so much commended for his Fidelity, Equity and Justice, is set out by this Author, while he tells us, that if the Parliament refuse to do what they justly may and ought to refuse, his Majesty may be so provoked and irritated as to do all the Mischiefs to the Protestant Religion mentioned in the Author's long Harangue. Now, if scandalum magnatum be petty Treason, what must so horrid a slandering of our gracious and dread Sovereign deserve? But 3. tho' it were true (as far be it from us to think so) that his Majesty may be so irritate by the Parliament's refusing to suspend the Execution of those penal Statutes, as to do all the Hurt and Damage to the Protestant Religion the Author recites, yet this is no Shadow of Reason to prove, that the keeping up of those penal Statutes, is now become hurtful and destructive to the Protestant Religion. For 1. If the King's Majesty were of such an unjust, passionate and furious Disposition, as this base Slanderer of him does more than obliquely point him out to be, and if thereupon he may, when irritate, do such Hurt to the Protestant Religion while it is fenced with those penal Laws; may he not do much more Hurt thereunto, when that Fence is either taken away or weakned, if he shall be irritate by a Parliament refusing to grant what he may further seek of them afterwards in favours of the Popish Religion? And considering how unweariedly active Papists will be in vexing his Majesty with their Solicitations for advancing their Religion, who can tell what he may further propose to Parliaments in favours of it? 2. If the King's Majesty, upon his being irritate, should do all that Mischief to the Protestant Religion (which far be it from us so much as to imagine) yet this would no more make the keeping up of the penal Statutes a Mean destructive to the Protestant Religion, than a Hedge becomes destructive to a Vineyard, or a Wall to a besieged City, when Men become angry with these that keep it up. It is a Piece of very great Nonsense to say, that Laws made in Defence of the Protestant Religion, and in their own Nature not only subservient, but necessary to the Defence thereof, can become destructive, or so much as hurtful to it in any Case. If the Protestant Religion be destroyed, it is certainly some other Thing than these Laws kept up, that destroys it; yea, it cannot be destroyed till these Laws be first destroyed, either by taking them away, or relaxing them, or by acting contrary to them if standing.

In the third Place, for eluding the Obligation of the Oath of the Test, the Author says, Page 7. Parag. 1. That by consenting to the Immunity of the Papists from the Execution of penal Statutes, we do not consent to repeal, abrogate, or take them away (they standing still on the File unrepealed) yea, we do not allow the Alteration of any of them, which is plainly as great Nonsense, as to say, that by consenting to the Immunity of Thieves, Murderers, Witches, or other most criminal Offenders, from the Execution of criminal Laws made against them, we do not consent to repeal, abrogate, or so much as to alter any way those Laws. What do penal Laws signify, if by Law Immunity be given to Transgressors of them, from the Penalty annexed to them?

In the fourth Place, for eluding the Obligation of the Oath of the Test, our Author nibbles and quibbles (none can know to what Purpose, except it be to deceive) about these plain Words in it. [And shall never consent to any Change or Alteration contrary therunto.] In his descanting upon which Words, he says, that when they are seriously considered, it will appear, that the Change and Alteration sworn against, is the Change and Alteration of the Protestant Religion it self, or of any of the necessary and essential Doctrines thereof. And whoever thought otherwise, who but slightly considered these Words? But withal even to them who curiously and slenderly consider them, it will appear, that not only the Change and Alteration of the Protestant Religion it self, but also every Change and Alteration contrary thereto, is sworn against in them. And there may be Changes and Alterations, many and great enough, contrary unto the Protestant Religion, tho' it self be not changed and altered. Has not God preserved the Protestant Religion it self, notwithstanding that many Changes and Alterations contrary unto it have fallen out? And will a Change either of, or in Laws made in Defence of the Protestant Religion, be no Change and Alteration at all contrary unto it? But the Author subjoins Page 7. that none will imagine, that to consent to the suspending, of the Execution of penal Statutes against Papists is to grant Consent to the Alteration of our reformed Religion. This which he saith, is as if one should say, that none will imagine, that to consent to the throwing down a Wall about a besieged City, or pulling up a Hedge about a Vineyard, is to consent to any Change or Alteration in the Vineyard or besieged City. Our Religion being considered (as in the present Case it ought to be) as fenced with penal Statutes against its Enemies, will there be no Change and Alteration at all of it as such, or if none of it self, yet would there not be any Change or Alteration contrary unto it, if it be denuded and deprived of that Fence? The Words of an Oath are to be taken, and by conscientious Men will be taken, in the most comprehensive Sense the Words will natively bear, and not in the narrow or distorted Sense which the Quibblings of perverse Men put upon them. But

In the last Place, the Author utterly throws down the Obligation of the Oath of the Test, and the strong Bulwark of the Protestant Religion, with one very frightful and terrible Blow, viz. by a thundring Assertion, that to make or own penal Statutes against Papists, appears rather one of these Popish or fanatical Principles and Doctrines,

I know none, (nor I think the Author either) who holds it to be an essential Article of the Protestant Religion, to make or own these Laws, tho' the Christian (which is the Protestant) Religion warrants and approves them; for the Protestant Religion was in all its essential Principles, before those human penal Laws were made, and therefore before they could be owned. So then, according to this Author, the making or owning of them, is one of the Popish or fanatical Principles, which by the Oath of the Test we are bound to renounce and disown. This, forsooth, is an unanswerable Argument for his Purpose: But what needed our Author be at all this Pains, so voluminously to plead for such a pretty Thing as the bare suspending the Execution of those Laws, since, according to him, the very Laws themselves, Root and Branch, are so strongly abjured by all the Members of Parliament, who have taken the Test? Yet, good Man, he will find it no small Difficulty to persuade either Papist or Protestant, or himself either, to be of this Mind.

Resp. VII. The Author's last Argument is drawn from what the King may legally do by his Prerogative. His Majesty's Prerogative, like the Edge of a Razor, is dangerous to be meddled with, yet with all due Respect to his Majesty's Prerogative, and, I hope, without Offence; these few Things, amongst many, may be said in Answer to the Author's Argument drawn from it. 1mo. How great soever be his Majesty's Prerogative, none that is orthodox will affirm, that by virtue of it he may dispense with an unrepealed Law of God, as the Law for punishing Idolaters is. There is a great Difference betwixt granting an Indemnity for a bypast Transgression, of a divine criminal Statute, (as is the divine Law against a Murderer) and tho granting an Immunity from all Punishment, to them that shall transgress such a Law for the future; and whatever can be said for the former, who, that is either a good Divine or a good Christian, will assert that his Majesty by virtue of his Prerogative may do the latter? 2do. If his Majesty by his Prerogative, may legally indulge the Exercise of Idolatry, with Impunity to them who practise it, tho' (as hath been proven) there be a standing divine Law for punishing it, what Reason and Account can be given why he may not also, by his Prerogative, give an Immunity and Exemption from all Punishment, to such as shall practise Theft, Murder, Witchcraft, Incest, and such other horrid Crimes? 3to. Albeit Papists are not ignorant of what his Majesty may do by his Prerogative, and do brag much of it, yet it would seem they are not of our Author's Mind, that he may legally by his Prerogative, give an Immunity to them for the Exercise of their Worship, else they would not be at such a great deal of pains to get this granted to them by the Parliament. 4to. Whatever, and how great soever be his Majesty's Prerogative, yet in the present Case under Consideration, he hath been pleased to limite the same, by ratifying and confirming all the Laws for the Protestant Religion, most of which, if not all of them are penal, against its Enemies: And 5to. Whatever his Majesty may legally do by virtue of his Prerogative, yet the Members of Parliament may not legally (even in regard of human Law) consent to a suspending of the Execution of penal Statutes against Papists, they being bound up from giving that Consent by the Oath of the Test, imposed on them by Law, consented unto, and confirmed by his present Majesty, and by several other standing Laws; besides that, a far higher Law, the Laws of God, ties them to refuse that Consent.

Having mentioned and confuted all in our Author's Paper, that hath any Shadow and Semblance of a Reason for persuading an allowing unto Papists, so much as the private Exercise of their Religion and Worship, I shall pass by other Things in it, such as his insinuating, that if the Oath of the Test bind up from allowing unto Papists an Impunity in the Practice of their Idolatry, then it binds up from giving Charity to a starving Papist, (which is as if one should say, that what binds up from allowing Immunity and Impunity unto a Murderer, in the Practice of his Sin, binds up from giving Meat and Drink unto him, while the Magistrate suffers him to live.) Our Author's professing, that if the Parliament refuse their Consent to a suspending the Execution of penal Statutes against Papists, he sees not how it is possible to avoid that Scandal of bording Dominion and Right or Property on Grace, (and it is just alike possible to avoid that Scandal, without suspending the Execution of penal Statutes, yea, without taking quite away the Laws themselves against Swearers, Sodomites, Murderers, &c.) his Impudence in affirming again and again, Pag. 3 and 5. that tho' there was apparent Danger to our Religion from Papists in former Times, when all the Magistrates, supreme and subordinate, were Protestant, and all the Power, civil and military, was in the Hands of zealous Protestants, but that now, when it is far otherwise, we are out of all reasonable Fears from Papists. These, I say, and many such like Things in our Author's Paper, I pass by, as Things that ly obvious and open to the Scorn and Contempt of any who retain the Exercise of their Judgment and Reason.

And thir Reflections upon our Author's Paper, having exceeded much the Brevity at first intended in them, I shall conclude them with one of these Reasons and Arguments, which in the last Paragraph of his Paper he calls idle and frivolous, (a strong Answer indeed to them) against that parliamentary Allowance he in his whole Paper pleads for unto the Papists, to practise their idolatrous Worship without any Molestation. The Reason and Argument is this, he who will allow the Practice of a Sin, is in divine and all reasonable human Construction guilty of that Sin, much more he who frames the Iniquity of that Allowance by a Law. If our Author or any other deny this, he is no good Divine: And let any who doubt of it consider Ephes. 5. 11. and cor. 7. with Psal. 50. 18. and what Commentators, both Popish and Protestant, say on these and such like Places; but so it is, that the private as well as publick Practice of Popery, (it being Idolatry)

(if our Author or any other deny this he is no good Protestant) ergo, Let these therefore concerned, consider, that if they give their Consent, especially their parliamentary Consent, that Papists shall have the Exercise of their Worship in private Houses, (and this may be publick enough) with all Manner of Impunity to them therein, they who give this Consent will be guilty interpretatively of all that Idolatry, which, upon that Indulgence and Impunity from all Punishment, shall be practised by Papists. To say that this shall not import any Allowance or Approbation of the Popish Religion, is just such another Contradiction, as to say that the Laws against Papists shall remain in their full Force, excepting in so far as they are so innovated, that Papists are put under the Protection of the King's Laws, a considerable Number whereof are the Laws against Papists. Let it also be adverted unto, that he who allows the Practice of a Sin, by giving Immunity and Impunity to the Practisers of it, is in the Construction both of divine and human Law, guilty of all the Hurt, Harm, and Mischief that follows thereupon.

These

These therefore who are apt to flatter themselves, by looking only to what for present is next before their Eyes, shall do well to look so far before their Nose, as to consider that whatsoever dreadful Mischief shall follow to our Religion, Liberties, Estates and Lives, by their taking away or relaxing the Statutes against Popery, and thereby letting loose the bloody Papists upon us, if they be called to an Atter-account, (as either God or Man will call them to it) they will be found liable to all the Punishments due to the Practisers of those Mischiefs. He that deliberately or wilfully untie a chained Lion, Bear, or any other ravenous devouring Beast, does justly deserve to be punished for all the Mischief done by it, when loosed.

*Letter from the Freeholders of the Shires of

Gentlemen,

WE cannot but acquaint you with the extraordinary Surprize that we and all the Country are in, to hear of these Things that are in Agitation among you, in this present Session of Parliament. We have indeed, to our great Satisfaction, been informed of your Steadiness and Courage, wherein you have fully answered our Expectations, and the Trust we reposed in you; and for which we do heartily give you our most affectionate Thanks: But we must tell you, that to us it doth appear very odd, that not only so strange a Thing as the Repeal of the penal Laws, and the opening of Access unto Papists, by Authority of Parliament, unto Places of publick Trust, which is downright the overturning of our Religion and Laws, hath been proposed to you, but likewise, that divers unaccountable and illegal Methods have been practised, for compassing of that End.

Albeit we cannot doubt of his Majesty's Willingness to take those of his own Perswasion under his Royal Protection, whilst they contain themselves within due Bounds, and make it appear, that their Principle is indeed Conscience, and not Faction or Interest, whilst they confine their Religion to their Hearts and Closets, and aspire not to usurp a Share in the Government, contrary to Law: Yet we shall never be induced to think, that this Demand, as it lies before you, being in effect to abrogate your own fundamental Laws; and to undermine your own Religion, could ever have proceeded from him, who hath given us so authentick repeated Assurances, who so perfectly understands his own and his People's true Interests, who hath given so eminent Demonstrations of his Wisdom, Clemency, and princely Affection to his Subjects, and who hath, in his own Person, proposed so illustrious an Example, of being at once true to Conscience, and observant of the Laws: But we rather believe it to be the Effect of the indiscreet and officious Forwardness of Under-agents, who may perhaps be one Day made to answer, for thus endeavouring to beget a Misunderstanding betwixt the King and his People. Howsoever it be, if we take a right View of the Matter, we must say; as all good Christians have ever said in the like Case, and as particularly the City of Magdeburg replied to the triumphant Emperor Charles V. when he required their Submission to the Interim, If our Lives and Fortunes, said they, belong to you, yet you must allow our Consciences to be God's.

It is not our Business here to prove, that the Popish Worship pleaded for is flat Idolatry; our Law justly terms it so, and our Divines have plainly demonstrated it to be an Idolatry worse than heathenish, there being no Colour to excuse it, which the Heathens had not better Ground to alledge for theirs; that it is for Substance, the very same Worship with which the deluded Pagans were inveigled, before the spreading of the Gospel, being exactly copied from that Model, and only christened with new Names, hath, in a very obvious Parallel, been often, by many learned Protestants, so fully and convincingly laid open, that no considering Man's Eyes can be further held in the Mist, as to this Truth.

Nor need we suggest unto you, how otherwise grossly erroneous that Church is in its Doctrines, nor how tyrannical in its Government, being a combined Company, under a monstrous spiritual Head, who carries ingraven upon him, this grand indelible Character of Antichrist, That he exalts himself above all that is called God, or is "august and venerable amongst Men: For whatever Stretches have been made by modern Papists, to deny or palliate that intolerable Pretension to a supreme dispensing and deposing Power seated in the Pope; yet as it hath been, in many fatal Instances, actually exercised, so the Right thereunto is, at this Day, one of the most sacred Articles of the more consequential Italian, Spanish, and other Catholick Creeds, and is still easily insinuated upon the Consciences of seduced Bigots, by the Craft of designing Priests, wherever their Superstition doth obtain; yea, it is more safe at Rome to blaspheme the blessed Name of God than to deny it.

We nothing doubt, but you and all good Protestants are fully satisfied in these Two capital Points, That the Pope and his Clergy are the Antichrist, and that the Mass, and other Parts of the Romish Worship, are the grossest and most unreasonable Idolatry that ever was broached in the World. God hath, in all Ages, raised up Witnesses to these Truths, even in the Midst of Popish Darkness, many whereof have sealed them with their Blood. This hath been the constant unanimous Doctrine of Protestant Divines, for near Two hundred Years past, and our Church hath, ever since the Reformation, taught us so from the Scriptures.

Now, if these Things be so, what Christian can, without Horror, think of consenting to a Liberty for Antichrist? and so of opposing, in a judicial Way, the Will and Laws of the Son of God; and that in behalf of his chief Adversary, whom he hath so notably stigmatized in his Word: What Protestant can,

X x

* The Word σεβασμια, signifies Worship, thence comes σεβασμια, the Term appropriated to the Roman Caesars, and in Latin rendered augustinus. † ὁ ἐναντιοπαρῶν without participating with Idols, agree to the most minute Allowance of either Church or House Idolatry? What Subject can, without Disloyalty, assent in the least to the Re-admission of an insolent usurping foreign Head.

But if any Manner of Doubt should remain as to these Things, with any Members of Parliament, where-by they might incline to think that they have some Latitude left, in hearkning to the Proposal made for granting Ease to Papists, then, since there are at least so violent Presumptions of the Truth of what is above asserted from Scripture, and from the uniform Doctrine of Protestant Churches, and seeing this is a Business of the vastest Concernment to the Souls of Men, as well as to their secular Interests, wherein prudence Men and Christians can never be too wary, nor too well advised: And finally, since the Priests Lips should keep Knowledge, and the Law is to be sought at their Mouths; upon all these Considerations, it will certainly, in the first Place, belong to, and ought to be demanded from the Reverend Prelates, who in Parliament represent the Protestant Clergy, and are intrusted with the Care of Souls, that before the Parliament advance one Step in this Affair, they clearly and convincingly, from Scripture, resolve the other Members who are no Divines, in these important Queries.

Whether the Pope and his Clergy be that Antichrist that was to come? and whether the plain and obvious scriptural Characters of the eldest Son of Perdition, can agree to any Power, Potentate, or Society of Men, civil or ecclesiastical, upon Earth, save the Papal? Whether the Doctrine of Demons, or the heathenish Adoration paid to the Ghosts of departed Heroes, be not revived, taught, and practised by the Romish Church, in the worshipping of Saints departed? And since the Papists, being challenged of Idolatry, in bowing to Images, recur to that trifling Subterfuge of not adoring the Image, but the Thing represented by it, in presence of the Image, it would likewise be cleared, whether the Jews were ever so senseless as to fall down before a molten Calf, merely in respect to it self, the Matter of which had lately hung in their Ears, or been worn upon their Arms; or if they did not rather mistake it, through their Egyptian Prejudices, to bear some Resemblance of God? or, at least, dream'd it to receive some secret Virtue, by passing through the high Priest's Hands? Whether Hell did ever contrive a more sottish Idolatry, than is the worshipping (not of a Substance, but) of bare Accidents, and that with the supreme Degree of Adoration due to God alone? For so the Council of Trent, expressly determines, That the faithful are obliged to exhibit the Cult of Latria to the very Sacrament, that is, not to Christ only in the Sacrament, but also to the Colour, Smell, and Dimensions of a Wafer, that according to them inwrap him. In short, it will become the spiritual Lords, before all further Procedure in this Matter, plainly and positively to declare, whether the Pope and his Clergy be Antichrist, and whether the Mass be Idolatry or not?

We do not judge it necessary here, to insist upon the Heap of their other ridiculous and absurd Doctrines, or rather Dreams, their toppish Fables, impertinent Fooleries, and antick Pageantries of Worship, which more resemble a charming Incantation, than the spiritual Service of the true and living God; their villainous Tricks and treacherous Practices, destructive to the Quiet and Safety of Mankind, all which gave the highest Reason for enacting our penal Laws against them, and do still give for maintaining of the same. We shall only observe, that the Source of all these is their chimerical Claim of Infallibility, pregnant with innumerable Errors, lodged, they can never agree amongst themselves where or with whom; but, to be sure, according to them all, somewhere or other in their Church; and practically refunding at last, into the oraculous Dictates of every little Priest. 'Tis by Means of this, that all their Votaries are indispensably obliged to support all their Errors; and whatever smooth and plausible Words many of their Tenets and Practices be clothed with on this Side the Alps yet, to joyn in Communion with those Churches that maintain bare-fac'd, stupid, and undisguised Popery, and to swallow glibly down whatever their ghostly Guides propose; and it is hereby they are likewise bound, under Pain of Damnation, (and the Order of Jesuits in particular, are at their Admission tied by Oath) to exert their utmost Vigour and Zeal for the Extirpation of Heresy, and the Propagation of their pretended Catholick Faith, and that not by the meek and gentle Ways

† Or if we are yet to look for another to rise out of the Tribe of Dan, or from any where else, (as the Papists fondly dream) who, in the Space of Three Years and an Half, is to do greater Feats than can be done in many Ages, to reign, according to some, at Rome, according to others at Jerusalem, who is to conquer the whole Earth, &c. their Accounts of him are loaded with Contradictions. As that he was to be revealed, when that which did withhold, to wit, the Emperors of Rome, should be taken out of the Way, being a Mystery of Iniquity that did already work in the very Apostles Days, and falling away of the true Church; that he was to boast of Miracles, and, by lying Wonders, to set up a Babylonish Idolatry, and to come with all Deceivableness of Unrighteousness, and to be given up to strong Delusions, to believe a Lie, such as that hideous Monster of Transubstantiation, the gainful Fignient of Purgatory, the pernicious Nonsense of Indulgences, and a Thousand other impious Fables, which not only destroy themselves and one another, but wholly evert and overthrow all Christianity and Reason; that he was to forbid to marry, not regarding the Desire of Women, which is Marriage, but indulging execrable unnatural Lusts, and to command to abstain from Meats, which God hath created to be received with Thanksgiving; that he was to have his Seat in the great City, founded upon Seven Hills, which then ruled over the Nations, and which the Papists themselves acknowledge to be Rome; that the Kings of the Earth were to give him their Power, until the Words of God should be fulfilled, that he should push with Two Horns, a civil and spiritual boundless Authority, and speak like a Lamb, professing himself to be the Vicar, or in place of the Lamb of God, but really be and rule like a Dragon; that he was to be, in divers Respects, the Seventh and Eighth Head of the Roman Empire, whereof one was, and Five had fallen in the Apostles Days; that he was to be clothed with Purple and Scarlet, the very Colours which the Pope and his Cardinals affect in the Inaugurations, Processions, Solemnities, and even in their ordinary Apparel; that he was to sit in the Temple of God, in the glorious Holy Mount, seated between the Seas, and, in that Elevation, to exalt and magnify himself above every God, claiming a Superiority over Kings, Rulers, and Governors, and to speak marvellous Things against the GOD of Gods, in dispensing with his Laws, and allowing them no Authority but from his Mouth, and to set up and honour the Mahometan, strange Gods of his own making and canonizing, which his Fathers never knew; that he was to impose his Doctrines, and the Dictates of his false infallible Chair, upon all the World that came within his Reach, so that no Man might live without his Mark; that he was to be, by way of Eminence above all others, the false Prophet, and was for a Time to prosper, and weir out the Saints of the Church, as the Pope at this Day doth, by Dispensations, Indulgences, Simony, &c. and a chief Part of his Traffick to be not only the Bodies but the Souls of Men, and that he was to be drunk with the Blood of the Martyrs and Saints of Jesus; in a Word, that he and his Party were to be for Idolatry a Babylon, for Tyranny an Egypt, and a school for Corruption. These few, amongst many other Passages, being either the very Words, or most clear and palpable Sense of the Scripture, and seeming to unavoidably to grip and lay hold upon the Man of Sin, sitting in the pretended infallible Chair of St. Peter at Rome, a more than ordinary Evidence will be necessary, to direct how otherwise they are to be applied: For as to the Popish Evils, such as the reserving some of these Things to the Turk, as it has having Judas, now all in Rome, in his Possession, could entitle him to the Character of sitting in the Temple of God; and as if he who was to usurp that Seat, was not other to be one who makes external Profession of Christianity; or, as it was the Mystery of the Ottoman, not of the Papal Inquiry, that began to work so early, even in the Apostles Days: These and the like, are so obviously silly and contradictory, that it is even a Shame to mention them, and serve for no other end, than to throw a little Dust upon the Eyes of such as are willing to have them put out, and who being pre-engaged by Interest, and other sordid Motives, rather than fail of a Pretence, will wink themselves unto Popery.

Ways of Christian Perswasion, but by the infernal Methods of lying, dissembling, plotting, murthering, torturing, and imbruing their Hands in the Blood of all who stand in their Way. History is full of sanct Examples of this Papal Fury; and we have recent bleeding Instances, in the Desolations of France, Hungary, Piedmont, and other Places, fresh before us.

By all which it evidently appears, how desperate and implacable is the raging Madness of the Romish Agents, and how actively they bestir themselves for the total Overthrow of the Reformation, in all Places where they unhappily gain the Ascendant over the Spirits of these in Power; their great Design being to reinstate the delivered Nations under the Yoke of a foreign Head, and to reintroduce the universal Empire of old Heathenish Rome, (to which our generous Ancestors alone, of all Kingdoms in Europe, could never be brought to submit) and that under a new and ghostly Disguise; a Domination by so much the more pernicious and vile, that the former imported only a civil Subjection to a princely People; but this a spiritual, as well as temporal Thralldom, under the capricious Impositions of a saucy incroaching Priest.

These, we doubt not, and a Thousand such Considerations more, will natively arise in your own Thoughts, and will manifestly hold forth to you the hainous Guilt, and eminent Hazard which any Protestant State or Kingdom must inevitably draw upon it self, by permitting the Parry of Antichrist, to exercise their Idolatry by Law; much more where Jesuits and Priests are ever so little tolerated and connived at: For whatever Moderation might be extended to peaceable conscientious Protestant Dissenters, yet these indefatigable Frogs, spued out of the Mouth of the Dragon, and of the Beast, and of the false Prophet, † that crawl into the Bed-chambers of Princes, and are sent forth to gather the Kings of the Earth unto the Battle of the great Day of God, the Disgrace of Mankind, and very Bane of all human Society, can never be suffered, upon any Terms, to enter, having given more than sufficient Evidence of their incurable Treachery, in all Places wherever they have been admitted; and whenever they could have but the thinnest Shadow of Connivance, they have greedily embraced, and wonderfully improved the same, knowing that the faintest Colour of a Law, may, by their Artifice, be heightened to a surprising Advantage, when they can hope to be Masters of the Interpretation. This some foreign States, ‡ even of the Romish Communion it self, have prudently been aware of, and carefully provided against; and this is that which, at the Reformation, moved our wise and pious Predecessors, by so strict and so often repeated Laws, to fence their Religion, their Lives, and their Liberties, against those unwearied Underminers of all that is dear to honest Men, whenever they obtain the least Access to insinuate themselves.

But to come closer to the present Case, that which in a more particular Manner we recommend to your serious Consideration, is the very odd and suspicious Circumstances under which this Proposal is now made. As

I. For what end do the Papists seek a Repeal of standing Laws, or indeed any Favour by Authority of Parliament at this Time, when they are not molested? unless with design to grasp all Places of Trust into their own Hands, to exercise their idolatrous Worship openly and avowedly, to scatter their Infection, without running the Risque of an After-reckoning, and with Hopes at length to abrogate all our Laws that establish the Protestant Religion; (by which they can fear to be one Day called to an Account for their present Miscarriages, and their unwarrantable invading of Places of publick Trust) and perhaps when they shall be strong enough for it, to divert the rightful Succession, and so become our absolute and incontrollable Masters: For if they pretend no further than moderate Ease and Connivance, what Need is there of an Act of Parliament for this? Who disquiets them? Or where are the penal Laws put in Execution? Yes, what have they at present to complain of, but that they want a national Establishment? And it is in vain here to ask, Why then are those Laws any longer kept up? Since they are, under God, and his Majesty's Royal Promises, the only legal Security of our Religion, and our best Defence against the insolent Attempts of these our all-ingrossing Adversaries, who have no other Restraint but the Terror of those Laws hanging over their Heads, as a perpetual Warning, if they abuse their present Favour, of what they may in Retaliation expect, at that Time, which perhaps is hastning faster on than they apprehend, when our penal Statutes shall be as an Echo, to that great Command of the first Lawgiver, Reward her even as she rewarded you.

II. Why is this required at a Time when the Protestant Religion, all Europe over, is so low? when the Papacy hath gained and doth daily gain such Ground upon the Reformation; when the Reformed French, an innocent and loyal People, who had done so signal Services to the Crown, and had been the very Instruments of settling their present Sovereign in that absolute Power, which he now, without all Provocation on their Part, so inhumanely exerciseth upon themselves; a People against whom, even their keenest Enemies, could not invent the least Shadow of Accusation; yet, by a long Tract of unjust Edicts, and dreadful Oppressions, have, by Degrees, been robbed of their well-founded Rights and Privileges, and at length to the highest Violation of publick Faith, and Infringement of the most sacred reiterated Engagements, are not only totally deprived of all their Liberties, but are compelled by Barbarities surpassing all Belief, either with utmost Hazard, to forsake and abandon their Estates and Friends, and native Land, or, flatly against their Consciences, to change their Religion, and pine away in Anguish and Despair; a Persecution of that prodigious Size, that we hope it shall stand a single Instance, whilst the World stands: And that as in its Complex, it never had a Precedent in any former Age, so in all succeeding Generations, it shall never have a Parallel; but that Protestants every where will be awakened by it, to consider what they are to expect from so perfidious and bloody a Religion. But now, whilst other Popish Countries are endeavouring to transcribe the French Example, and this Island remains, in a Manner, the only considerable Part of Christendom, wherein the Reformed Religion stands yet free from the cruel Attacks of Romish Rage, for them now to attempt to worm themselves in among us, and to court us to demolish our own Walls, looks as if they meant to involve us also in the universal Overthrow.

III. When

X x 2

† By which some Divines understand the Devil, the Roman Emperor, and the Pope, Rev. 16. 13. Esad. 8. 3.
‡ As the Republick of Venice, which banished the Jesuits out of their Territories, France did also for a Time expel them, after the barbarous Murders of Henry III. and IV.

III. When, to all our former Ties, we have, in the immediately preceeding Parliament, to which his present Majesty was Commissioner, in prospect of our Danger from the Restlessness of our Adversaries, who cease not to introduce their Errors, Superstitions and Delusi us, and to insinuate themselves into Affairs and Places of publick Trust, superadded under his own Royal Direction and Influence, the solemn Oath of the Test, as an impregnable Rampart against their Machinations; and now so very soon after, whilst that sacred Bond remains yet fresh, and in full Vigour, to hope for Admission in less or in more, or a Relaxation of the Laws made against them, speaks as prodigious Impudence in them, as it would do Perfidy and Treachery in us to grant it. It is very strange, how any who reads and ponders the Words of the Test, and of the Act enjoining it, dream of reconciling it, or think it can possibly consist with the Parliament's granting the least Crum of Favour to Papists.

IV. It deserves to be considered, that after this very Parliament hath signalized it self in Loyalty, and firm Adherence to one Branch of the Test, by suppressing the late Rebellion, and quelling those inhumane Monsters of fanatical Fury, that had risen amongst our selves, and by a frank and ready Concurrence to the enacting such Laws, and establishing such Methods of Severity, as the wild Insolence of that Party made necessary; that now the Papists should pretend to have us ramiely pass from the other Part of our Oath, which secures us from their assiduous and no less dangerous Attempts; and so to slacken the Reins of a steady Government, in which the Security of the Crown and Nation, against their Enemies on both Hands, doth consist, seems to import, that they make a very scurvy Representation of us to his Majesty, and would do so to the World, as an easy pusillanimous People, led by Interest, and overawed by Fear, who may be driven to any thing, and with whom the Performance of Duty, is the Result of mean and unmanly Principles, and not of Conscience or Honour. And who knows, if the King, who is wise as an Angel of God, may not have been the more readily induced to consent, that this Tentative be made, to the end he might thereby try whom he could safely trust; knowing well, that these who are false to God and themselves, can never be faithful to their Prince; and that they only, who, after his own Royal Example, are honest and true to their Consciences, amidst all Discouragements and Dangers, are the Persons in whom he can most entirely confide.

V. We shall add a further Remark that ought well to be thought upon, and warily adverted to, which is, That since the saying and hearing of Mass, is, by the fundamental Laws establishing our Religion, declared upon just Reason, to infer the Pains of Treason, because the Mass. (besides its Superstition and Idolatry) is the Band of Communion with those who seek to seduce and debauch his Majesty's Subjects, from their due Allegiance to their natural Prince, and who prefer a foreign Jurisdiction to his; and these Laws have been ratified by all Parliaments since the Reformation, and particularly by the first Act of this present Parliament, and are not now required to be abrogated. In what Manner can any Man, who shall vote for this Act, be assured of Immunity from being afterwards challenged for giving his Consent to the committing of (at least interpretative) Treason: Nor would it avail to alledge, that this Act is an Exception from the general Law; if such an Exception should be judged inconsistent and contradictory, so long as the general Law stands unrepealed, and how far soever the Parliament's Power may reach, in dispensing with common Laws, yet certainly it is a very different Case, to dispense with those Laws that infer Treason against the King and State, and are grounded upon so weighty Reasons, as are those which influenced the making of our Laws, for the securing of our Religion, and the total Abolishment of Popery; seeing, by such a Dispensation, Liberty and Immunity would be allowed to such open Enemies of King and Government, as, in the Face of the World, dare own themselves Subjects of a foreign higher Power, Jurisdiction, and Head; a Head which, they boast, hath sometimes made Emperors serve as Footmen; and which, by the cheating Bugbears of unlimited Vicarship, triple Crown, double Sword, and Keys, doth arrogantly claim an authoritative Right to dispose of Kings and their Kingdoms, whatever way the Caprice of his Infallibility shall inspire him: And the Case standing thus, were it not both very dangerous, and very unsuitable to the Duty which the Parliament owes the King, as his sworn Subjects, and grand Council, to make a Law for allowing of that, which, by the standing, unrepealed, and so well founded Laws of the Nation, is constructive Treason against his Majesty, even tho' his Majesty should so far yield to the Importunities of some about him, flowing from their private Ends, as to give way thereunto himself.

VI. Lastly, there is one Thing more we cannot but take Notice of, That as you are the first Parliament in the World, that so bold a Proposal, in such Circumstances, was ever made unto, so the Methods taken to accomplish it are unaccountably strange, and without all Precedent, and do speak both unmeasurable Rashness and Confidence in the Promoters thereof, and an indecent undervaluing of you; that Papers of Information pleading for the standing Laws should be suppressed, and the Havers or Spreaders of them exposed to Trouble, whilst others that labour by weak and flat Sophistry, to supplant the Law, that endeavour to pervert the plain Sense and Meaning of Acts of Parliament, which in Law is treasonable, and to elude the Obligation of the Test, which in Divinity is impious; that asperse his sacred Majesty, and characterize him as cruel and perfidious, and as intending Mischief against our Religion and Government, if not gratified in the demanded Favour: Whilst these, with other Popish Papers, Pamphlets and Books, are industriously spread, countenanced and supported, that so great Pains should be taken to brigue Votes, and to dispose or hector the Members of Parliament, to a Thing so directly opposite to their Consciences and to Law, by proposing Rewards to some, depriving, threatening, and intimidating others; that Courses, never till now known in this Kingdom, should be taken, to seclude or remove from voting, able and honest Members, who are most capable of serving God, their King and Country, in Parliament. All this looks so very odd and illegal, that we see not how it can be let pass, without a Parliamentary Representation to the King.

Upon the whole, tho' we have entire Confidence in your Constancy and Courage, yet the Matter now before you being of the highest Import and our very All lying in it at the Stake, we cannot, for our own further Exoneration, but earnestly obtest and enjoin you to remember, that, in this Affair, the Eye of God is in a special Manner upon you, that you are exposed at present, as on a Theatre, to the Eyes of all Europe, and particularly of our Neighbours in England, that the Hopes of Papists and Protestants depend upon your Determinations, that you have a Trust in your Hands for which you must be accountable to God, to your own Consciences, to the Memory of your renowned Ancestors, and to the present and succeeding Generations; and that if any of you, which we are far from fearing, should prove so degenerate and mean-spirited, as servilely to comply, and sacrifice the Religion and Laws of the Nation to present mistaken Interest, or be so far overswayed by Hopes or Fears, as but to keep Silence at this critical Time, and connive at so destructive a Vote; you shall never be able, by so doing to deceive God, who will certainly find you out, nor to save your worldly Concerns, by thinking to stop here, for, by unsatiable Priests, you shall still be pushed on to further Advances; so that there is no Mean, you must either resolve, at this Juncture, to stand your Ground, or to proceed the utmost Length, else all you can do at present, will as certainly pass for nothing, as it is now told some of you, that what you have already done shall not be valued unless you consent to this. Besides you should, by giving Way, in this Matter, to that assiduous insinuating Crew, the Romish Priests, not only endanger your secular Interests and Estates, many of which are settled by the Laws of the Kingdom, upon the Ruins and utter Extirpation of the Jurisdiction of the Pope and his Clergy, but also tarnish and forfeit all the Glory of your former Services, and, in the Sight of the World, brand your selves with the eternal Infamy of having vilely betrayed your Religion and Country, and taintly yielded up your selves, and your Posterity to Bondage.

We therefore, upon all these Considerations, do again solemnly obtest and enjoin you, by all that is sacred and dear unto Christians and Men.

First. That you give no Manner of Consent, directly nor indirectly, in favours of Papists, to the least slackning of the Force of the Law, in whatsoever Terms, or under whatsoever Cautions or Restrictions it may be offered and proposed, but that, to the uttermost of your Power, you vigorously oppose the same.

Secondly. That you heedfully beware of a Trepan in mistaking the Vote, remembering with what a Party you have to deal, but that you endeavour, if this Act comes in at all, to have it formally stated, approve or reject, left, by a captious proposing of the Question, or by any other preliminary or exploratory Vote, the Integrity, and good Intentions of honest Men, who are assured, are by the far greater Number in your Body, should remain undiscovered, and that for the strenghtning of mutual Confidence and Trust, you, by all Means, strive, in every Vote, to keep up a good Correspondence with such.

Lastly. Since it is not to be supposed, after the many repeated Declarations of his Majesty's gracious Purpose to preserve our Religion and Laws entire, that these Desires, which tend to weaken, or rather subvert both, do flow from his own Royal Heart, but rather from the impatient Forwardness of restless Priests, and the preposterous over-daring Zeal of new Profelytes who seek to value themselves, with their Confessors, upon doing some extraordinary Service for Rome. It is therefore our very earnest and serious Wish, if the Wisdom of the Parliament should so think fit, that an humble Address be ordered to his sacred Majesty, from the whole Body of Parliament, expressing their infinite Sorrow for being so far misrepresented, as to be thought capable of doing a Thing so much against their Consciences, their Honour and the Law, expecting and praying, from his Majesty's Goodness, and his Regard unto his loyal People, that some effectual Way may be found out, to stop the unhandson and illegal Courses that have been taken for practising Members, and laying aside or incapacitating to vote, such as are of unquestioned Loyalty, and good Affection to his Majesty's Service, and to the Government.

That the spreading and printing of Popish Pamphlets, and disseminating of their pernicious Principles (whether by themselves, or by false professed Protestants) may be impeded.

That the Grief of his Majesty's good and faithful Subjects may be appeased, and their further Fears prevented by the Removal of Papists from Offices of publick Trust, and the Nation secured from the like Danger in Time to come.

Shewing that they do make a repeated dutiful Offer of their Lives and Fortunes for his Majesty's Service (in which we, and we hope the whole Kingdom) do sincerely and heartily concur.

And that being by the established Laws their remaining firm and unshaken, guarded against the Hazard of Popery, or of the Access of Papists to any Share in the Government, they will, in their several Capacities, express all possible Tendernefs and Forbearance to the Persons of peaceable Papists, so long as they keep themselves within the Bounds prescribed by Law, this being the very utmost Length their Consciences and Honour can possibly allow them to go; humbly hoping that his Majesty will graciously approve, as the Effect of their bound Duty, this their Wariness in an Affair of so vast Consequence to the Government, and their Refusal to comply with that which their Religion makes Treason against God, and their Law makes Treason against the King. And we heartily wish, that some of you may have the Honour to be the first Proposers of this.

This sure is the proper Method to create an entire good Understanding betwixt the King and his People; and is the only native and dutiful Way of Redress for all Grievances that Subjects can have, or ought to take with so benign a Prince. Nor is it to be doubted, but his Majesty, who hath so graciously expressed himself, in his Letter, to be our indulgent Father, will, according to his innate Clemency and Goodness, favourably interpret, accept of, and correspond to the filial Confidence of his dutiful Subjects, who thus rely upon, and intrust themselves to his Royal paternal Care.

Robert Cathcart's Information against Mr. Renwick and his Party, 1686. No. CXXI.

Matters in Church and State being in Confusion, they have stepped into the Chair, and arrogated to themselves the Government both of Church and State, and the Management of both civil and ecclesiastical Affairs, and that by the same Party, Persons and Assembly.

And first, being joyned in Societies for religious Exercises, they commisionate, from these Societies, some of their Number to meet in a general Meeting (out of which they choose a Committee of Fifteen, who determine, termine, by Vote, in Affairs brought before them) who have constitute themselves into, and assumed the Name and Title of Convention of Sires, so, in the Declaration published at Lanerk, they call themselves, A Convention of Estates and Shires of Scotland, a Convention of unprelimited Members, the like whereof the Tyrant, since his Home-coming, never had, and have acted accordingly, 1mo. In a legal authoritative Deposing of the late King, rescinding, calling and annulling all the Acts and Statutes made by him, and his Conventions and Parliaments since the Year 1660. as they word it in the foresaid Declaration. 2do. In denouncing War against him, being thus declared a Tyrant, and deposed as such; and that in those Terms, in the Declaration published at Sanguhar, We declare War against such a Tyrant and Usurper, and against such as have any way acknowledged him in his Usurpation, civil or ecclesiastick, or shall in any wise acknowledge any other in the like Usurpation.

Next, as to Church Affairs, they have imposed Restrictions on Ministers in the Exercise of their Ministry, requiring them in their Call, intituled, Call of the united Presbyterians, to own their Papers, such as Rutheglie, Sanguhar and Lanerk Declarations, the Excommunication at Torwood, &c. declaring that otherwise they would not own them as Ministers, yea, that except they should forthwith embrace their Call (if they had once provided themselves with Ministers any other way) tho' they should afterward embrace, they might then own them as Brethren, never more as Ministers. And these being condemned as Ministers, they have entirely cast off the whole suffering Ministry, and taken the Power of Church-government into their own Hands, calling themselves the Antipopish, Antiprelatick, Anti-erastian, true Presbyterian Church of Scotland, in their printed Protestation against the Congregation at Rotterdam, and the Representatives of the Church, and sent Delegations, as such, to the Churches of Holland, Helvetia and Geneva.

The whole suffering Ministers being thus cast off, to supply this Want, or rather to erect a new Building (as their honourable Delegate Mr. Hamilton expresseth it, in his Letter recommendatory of Mr. Renwick to the Societies, Take this as the first Stone of your new Building) they have sent over some young Men of their Number, to the Netherlands, to study and to be ordained there. And having, by the lying Misinformation of their Delegate Mr. Hamilton, alledging that there were Eighty Elders who did concur in sending over Sixteen young Students, there being but Six young Men designed to be sent over, and Fifteen Persons who subscribed their Testificate, and not an Elder among them, imposed upon Mr. William Brackel, a Dutch Minister, have, by his Means, procured the Ordination of one of these young Men, Mr. James Renwick, whom alone they now own (declaring in their Letters to the Churches of Helvetia and Geneva, that they have no Minister save one, all the rest being turned cruel like the Ostriches in the Wilderness) whose first Work was to decry the whole suffering Ministry, namely, famous Macwaird, and that after his Death, with several others, who says yet further, That there is not a faithful Minister in Britain or Ireland, in a Letter to a Friend in Ireland, in Vindication of his Practice in seeking Ordination from the Church of Holland, wherein, speaking of that Church, he hath these Words, "But tho' there are some Things among them in that Church which are not justifiable, such as Organs in some of their Churches, and festival Days, and some customary Things, but I know that those in that Presbytery, with whom I was most intimately acquaint, never defended nor maintained such Things, but expressed their Design of a Reformation theretrom, tho' I could wish there were more Courage among them than there is; however their Case differeth from the Case of the Ministers of Britain and Ireland; for first that Church is not chargeable with Defections, as (Ah sad!) the Ministers of Britain and Ireland are chargeable with many gross Steps of defended Defection; it is true our Church was once a greater Length in Reformation than they are, however they are before us now in the most substantial Things, and have their Faces forward, whereas the Ministers of Britain and Ireland have theirs back again, and I count it my Duty to walk with those whose Faces are forward, and not with those whose Backs are turned." And a little after, "The next Thing you write of is, that I have separate from, and excommunicate all the Ministers belonging to Scotland; as to withdrawing from them, since their Unfaithfulness was made known to me, that I have done, and hold it to be my Duty."

They have also made Canons, in which are expressed the Qualifications of Persons capable to sit as Members in their Conventions, and Church-fellowship, whereof this is one, Are you free of joyning with the unfaithful, silent, complying Ministers of the Time, by hearing them preach, or receiving the Sacrament at their Hand, subjecting to their Discipline, or being joyned in Marriage with them. Which Canons they stretch the Length, that the Servant may not joyn in Family-worship with the Master, nor the Child with the Parent, if guilty of those Things by them judged scandalous. Thus Gavin Alison was debarred from sitting in their Meetings, because he joyned with his Father in Family-worship, who heard the indulged Ministers. Gavin Weir was censured for baptizing with Mr. George Barclay, Alexander Gordon for baptizing with Mr. Alexander Pedin, and several others.

And of late, at the general Meeting January 28. 1686. they have cast off most Part of the Societies in the Shires of Air and Galloway, chiefly upon these Two Heads. 1mo. That they would not disown and condemn the Declaration published by Argyle. 2do. Because they were clear to call and hear faithful suffering Ministers.

Whereas we are informed that several disaffected Persons within this his Majesty's Kingdom, have been of late very industrious, by false Reports, and malicious Insinuations, to suggest to many of his Majesty's loyal Subjects, as it we, his Majesty's chief Governor, intended to govern under his Majesty here, otherwise than by the known Law of this Land of Ireland, and as if some of his Majesty's loyal Subjects should stand in Hazard of being disturbed and disquieted in their just Liberties, Properties and other Rights due due to them by Law, which Calumnies have been heightened and encouraged by some few fiery Spirits in the Pulpits, by taking upon them to treat of Matters that do not ly within their Province; for which Assertions there was not the least Ground, but the perverse Humour, and wicked Principles of the Authors, since his sacred Majesty hath given all his Subjects frequent Assurances of his gracious Resolutions to govern them by Law, and to protect them in their respective Properties and Privileges according to Law; which Resolutions of his said Majesty he has given us his Deputy, in particular Charge, to observe and signify to all his Subjects. For the removing therefore of all Fears and Jealousies proceeding from such scandalous Suggestions, from the Hearts of his Majesty's Subjects here, and for quieting the Minds of the People; and to the end that all his Majesty's good and loyal Subjects may with Cheerfulness apply themselves to their particular Concerns, Trade and Vocation: We the Lord Deputy and Council do hereby publish and declare, that we will, by the Grace of God, apply all our Care and Industry to yield exact and perfect Obedience to his Majesty's said Commands; and do hereby publish and declare in his Majesty's behalf, that we shall take diligent Care that all his Majesty's Subjects within this Kingdom, of what Perswasion in Religion or Degree, whatsoever they be, shall be protected in their just Rights and Properties due to them by Law, and in the free Exercise of their Religion, provided they persevere in their Duty and Allegiance to his Majesty, without giving any Occasion of Disturbance to the Peace of the Kingdom. And for the further Preservation of the publick Peace of this Realm, we do charge and require all Persons whatsoever, to forbear speaking any undutiful or irreverent Expressions of his Majesty's sacred Person or Government. And we do require all his Majesty's Judges, Justices, Magistrates, and Officers, to take particular Care, that all Persons that shall be discovered to be guilty of spreading such scandalous Reports, or using such malicious Insinuations, shall be prosecuted according to the utmost Rigour of the Law, to the end the just Punishment to be inflicted upon them, may terrify others from committing the like Crime.

King's Letter to the Archbishops, with Directions to Preachers, March 1636.
N<sup>o</sup>. CXXIII.

J A M E S R.

Most Reverend Fathers in God, We greet you well. Whereas the bold Abuses, and Extravagancies of Preachers in the Pulpit, have not only by the Experience of former Ages, been found to tend to the Dishonour of God, the Scandal of Religion, and Disturbance of the Peace, both of Church and State, but did also (through the Licentiousness of the late rebellious Times) much increase, to the inflaming, fomenting, and heightning of the sad Distempers and Confusions that were then among us: And whereas even at this present (notwithstanding the merciful Providence of God, so signally manifested in restoring Our royal Family, and the lawful Government of these Realms, and putting an End to the great Rebellion, and notwithstanding the pious Care and Endeavours of our late dear Brother, and our Self ever since, to govern our Realms in Peace and Tranquillity) it may justly be feared that in sundry Parts of this Realm, there want not Men of unquiet and factious Spirits, who instead of preaching the pure Word of God, and building up the People in Faith and Holiness, will (if they be not restrained) make it a great Part of their Business to beget in the Minds of their Hearers, an evil Opinion of their Governors, by insinuating Fears and Jealousies, to dispose them to Discontent, and to season them with such unsound and dangerous Principles as may lead them into Disobedience, Schism and Rebellion: And whereas also sundry young Divines and Preachers, either out of a Spirit of Contention and Contradiction, or in a vain Ostentation of their Learning, take upon them in their popular Sermons, to handle the deep Points of God's eternal Counsels and Decrees, or to meddle with the Affairs of State and Government, or to wrangle about Forms and Gestures, and other fruitless Disputes and Controversies, serving rather to amuse than profit the Hearers; which is done for the most part, and with the greatest Confidence, by such Persons as least understand them: We, out of Our princely Care and Zeal for the Honour of God, the Advancement of Piety, Peace, and true Religion, and for the preventing for the future, as much as lieth in Us, the many and great Inconveniencies and Mischiefs that will unavoidably ensue, if a timely Stop be not given to these and the like growing Abuses, do, according to the Examples of several of Our Predecessors of blessed Memory, by these Our special Letters, straitly charge and command you, to use your utmost Care and Diligence that these Directions, which upon long and serious Consideration, Our late dear Brother thought good to give concerning Preachers, and which We upon like Considerations have Anno 1662. approved, and caused to be reprinted, and herewith sent unto you, be from henceforth duly and strictly observed by all the Bishops, and others concerned therein within your Provinces. And to this end Our Will and Pleasure is, that you forthwith send them Copies of these our Directions, to be by them speedily communicated to every Parson, Vicar, Curate, Lecturer, and Preacher in every Cathedral, Collegiate, and Parish-church within their Dioceses: And that you earnestly require them to imploy their utmost Endeavour for the due Observation of the same, whereof We shall expect a strict Account, both of you you, and every one of them: And these Our Letters shall be your sufficient Warrant, and Discharge in that behalf;

I. That no Preachers in their Sermons presume to meddle with Matters of State, to model new Governments, or take upon them to declare, limit, or bound out the Power and Authority of sovereign Princes, or to state and determine the Differences between Princes and the People; but that upon all good Occasions they faithfully instruct the People in their bounden Duty of Subjection and Obedience to their Governors, superior and subordinate, of all Sorts, and to the established Laws according to the Word of God, and the Doctrine of the Church of England, as it is contained in the Homilies of Obedience, and the Articles of Religion set forth by publick Authority.

II. That they be admonished not to spend their Time and Study in the Search of abstruse and speculative Notions, especially in and about the deep Points of Election and Reprobation, together with the incomprehensible Manner of the Concurrence of God's free Grace, and Man's free Will, and such other Controversies as depend thereupon: But howsoever that they presume not positively, and doctrinally to determine any Thing concerning the same.

III. That they forbear in their Sermons ordinarily and causelessly to enter upon the handling of any other Controversies of less Moment and Difficulty: But whensoever they are occasioned by Invitation from the Text they preach upon, or that in regard of the Auditory they preach unto, it may seem requisite or expedient so to do; that in such Cases they do it with all Modesty, Gravity, and Candor, asserting the Doctrine and Discipline of the Church of England, from the Cavils and Objections of such as are Adversaries to either, without Bitterness, Railing, Jeering, or other unnecessary or unseemly Provocation.

IV. That for the more edifying of the People in Faith and Godliness (the aforesaid Abuses laid aside) all Ministers and Preachers in their several respective Cures, shall not only diligently apply themselves to catechize the younger Sort, according as in the Book of Common Prayer is appointed; but also, shall in their ordinary Sermons insist chiefly upon catechetical Doctrines (wherein are contained all the necessary and undoubted Verities of Christian Religion) declaring withal unto their Congregations what Influences such Doctrines ought to have into their Lives and Conversations, and stirring them up effectually, as well by their Examples as their Doctrines, to the Practice of such religious and moral Duties, as are the proper Results of the said Doctrines, as Self-denial, Contempt of the World, Humility, Patience, Meekness, Temperance, Justice, Mercy, Obedience, and the like; and to a Detestation and shunning of Sin, especially such Sins as are so rife among us, and common to the Age we live in; such are those usually stiled the seven deadly Ones, in short, all Kind of Debauchery, Sensuality, Rebellion, Profaneness, Atheism, and the like. And because the late licentious Times have corrupted Religion, even in the very Roots and Foundations, that where there is an Afternoon's Exercise, it be especially spent either in explaining some Part of the Church-catechism, or in preaching upon some such Text of Scripture, as will properly and naturally lead to the handling of some Thing contained in it, or may conduce to the Exposition of the Liturgy, and Prayers of the Church (as Occasion shall be offered) the only Cause they grew into Contempt amongst the People being this, that they were not understood. That also the Minister, as often as conveniently he can, read the Prayers himself; and when he cannot so do, he procure or provide some fit Person in holy Orders, who may do it with that Gravity, Distinctness, Devotion and Reverence as becomes so holy an Action: And whensoever, by reason of his Infirmary, or the Concurrence of other Offices, the Time may seem too short, or be unable to perform the Office of both Prayers and Sermon at length, he rather shorten his Discourse or Sermon, than omit any Thing of the Prayers, lest he incur the Penalty of the Act for Uniformity, requiring them to be read according as the Book directs.

V. And further Our Will and Pleasure is, that all Ministers within their several Cures, be enjoined publicly to read over unto the People, such Canons as are or shall be in Force, at least once, and the Thirty nine Article twice every Year, to the end they may the better understand, and be more thoroughly acquainted with the Doctrine and Discipline of the Church of England, and not so easily drawn away from it as formerly they have been.

VI. Since preaching was not anciently the Work of every Priest, but was restrained to the choicest Persons for Gravity, Prudence and Learning, the Archbishops and Bishops of this Kingdom, are to take great Care whom they license to preach, and that all Grants and Licences of this Kind heretofore made by any Chancellor, Official, Commissary, other secular Person (who are presumed not to be so competent Judges in Matters of this Nature) be accounted void and null, unless the same shall likewise be allowed by the Archbishop or the Bishop of the Diocese, and that all Licences of Preachers hereafter to be made or granted by any Archbishop or Bishop, shall be only during Pleasure, otherwise to be void to all Intents and Purposes, as if the same had never been made nor granted.

VII. Lastly, that for the better observing of the Lord's Day, too much neglected of late, they shall, as by often and serious Admonitions and sharp Reproofs, endeavour to draw off People from such idle, debauched, and profane Courses as dishonour God, bring a Scandal on Religion, and Contempt on the Laws and Authority, Ecclesiastical and Civil, so shall they very earnestly perswade them to frequent divine Service on the Lord's Day, and other Festivals appointed by the Church to be kept solemn; and in case any Person shall resort sort unto any Taverns or Ale-houses, or use any lawful Sports and Exercises on such Days, the Minister shall exhort those which are in Authority in their several Parishes and Congregations, carefully to look after all such Offenders in any Kind whatsoever, together with all those that abet, receive or entertain them, that they may be proceeded against, according to the Laws, and Quality of their Offences, that all such Disorders may, for the Time to come, be prevented.

JA M E S, by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, To Our Lyon King at Arms, and his Brethren, Herald, Mace, of Our Privy Council, Purlevants, and Messengers at Arms, Our Sheriffs in that Part, conjunctly and severally, specially constitute, Greeting: Whereas We are informed that divers Ministers and others, to promote their seditious Designs, do take upon them in Sermons, and other Discourses, to alarm the People, and to raise Dislike of Our Person and Government in their Hearts, defaming and standing Our Designs, or at least, meddling in Our Affairs; all which are highly punishable, and the Punishments declared by Our Laws and Acts of Parliament, especially by the seventh Act of the eighth Par. of King James the VI. Our royal Grand-father, (of ever blessed Memory) Cap. 134. Intituled, Against Slanderers of the King, his Progenitors, Estate and Realm; And of which, in so far as relates to these Affairs, the Tenor follows. Forasmuch as it is understood to Our sovereign Lord, and his three Estates assembled in this present Parliament, what great Harm and Inconvenience has fallen in this Realm, chiefly since the Beginning of the civil Troubles, occurred in the Time of his Highness's Minority, through the wicked and licentious, publick and private Speeches, and untrue Calumnies of divers his Subjects, to the Disdain, Contempt and Reproach of his Majesty, his Council and Proceedings, and to the Dishonour and Prejudice of his Highness, his Parents, Progenitors and Estate; stirring up his Highness's Subjects thereby to Mifiking, Sedition, Unquietness, and to cast off their due Obedience to his Majesty, to their evident Peril, Tinsel and Destruction; his Highness continuing always in Love and Clemency towards all his good Subjects, and most willing to seek the Safety and Preservation of them all; which wilfully, needlessly, and upon plain Malice after his Highness's, Mercy and Pardon oft-times afore granted, has procured themselves by their treasonable Deeds, to be cut off as corrupt Members of this Common-wealth: Therefore it is Statute and Ordained, by Our sovereign Lord and his three Estates in this present Parliament, that none of his Subjects (of whatsoever Function, Degree, or Quality in time coming) shall presume to take upon Hand privately or publickly, in Sermons, Declamations, or familiar Conferences, to utter any false, slanderous, or untrue Speeches, to the Disdain, Reproach and Contempt of his Majesty, his Council and Proceedings, or to the Dishonour, Hurt or Prejudice of his Highness, his Parents and Progenitors, or to meddle in the Affairs of his Highness, and his Estate present, bygone, and in time coming, under the Pains contained in the Acts of Parliament, against Makers and Tellers of Leasings: Certifying them that shall be tried Contraveeners thereof, or that hear such slanderous Speeches, and report not the same with Diligence, the said Pains shall be executed against them with all Rigour, in Example of others. And to the end that so necessary and laudable a Law may receive due and punctual Obedience, We therefore, with Advice of Our privy Council, do hereby declare, that the Contraveeners hereof any manner of way, shall be exemplarily punished with all Rigour, conform to the Pre-script of the said Statute in all Points. And that Our Royal Pleasure in the Premises may be made publick and known, Our Will is, and we charge you strictly and command, that incontinent, these our Letters seen, ye pass to the Market-crosses of Edinburgh, and all the other Market-crosses of the head Burghs of the Shires of this Kingdom, and there in Our Name and Authority, by open Proclamation, make Publication of Our Royal Pleasure in the Premises, that all Our Lieges may have Notice thereof, and give Obedience thereto, as they will be answerable at their highest Peril.

JA M E S, by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, To Our Lyon King at Arms, and his Brethren, Herald, Mace, of Our Privy Council, or Messengers at Arms, Our Sheriffs in that Part, conjunctly and severally, specially constitute, Greeting: Forasmuch as We being now resolved, for the Ease of Our good Subjects, and quietting the Shires

Shires of Argyle and Tarbet, out of Our Royal Clemency and princely Compassion, to indemnify the Commoners therein, for their Accession to the late Argyle's Rebellion, with the Exception aftermentioned, do therefore, with Advice of Our Privy Council, hereby give and grant Our full, free, and ample Pardon and Indemnity to all the Commoners within the said Shires of Argyle and Tarbet, for their Lives only; excepting such as shall be found by Our Commissioner, now sent thither, during his Stay there, to have been either Ringleaders, or Officers in the said Rebellion, (who are hereby excluded.) And We hereby declare, that this Our Pardon and Indemnity shall be to the said Commoners (not excepted, as said is) as valid and sufficient, for any Accession they had to the said late Rebellion, or for harbouring, resetting, conversing, or corresponding with these Rebels, as if they and every of them had a particular Remission for the said Crimes, past under Our great Seal. And further, We hereby declare, that it is and shall be free to all Our Lieges, from the Date hereof, to converse, correspond, and intercommune with, reset, harbour, and entertain the Commoners indemnified, as said is, without incurring any Hazard, or Action, civil or criminal, upon that Account, in all Time coming: And that this Our gracious and ample Indemnity may be published and known, Our Will is, and We charge you strictly and command, that incontinent, these Our Letters seen, ye pass to the Market-cross of Edinburgh, and other Places needful, and there, in Our Royal Name and Authority, by open Proclamation, make Publication of Our gracious Pardon and Indemnity abovescriben, that all Persons concerned may have Notice thereof.

Criminal Letters against Doctor Gilbert Burnet, 1687. No. CXXVI. A.

JAMES, &c. To Our Lovits, &c. Heralds, Pursewards, Macers, and Messengers at Arms, Our Sheriffs in that Part, conjunctly and severally, specially constitute, Greeting: Forasmuch as it is humbly meant and complained to Us, by Our right trusty and familiar Counsellor, Sir John Dalrymple the younger of Stair, Our Advocate, for Our Interest, upon Doctor Gilbert Burnet.

That where, notwithstanding by the Laws and Acts of Parliament, and constant Practick of this Our Kingdom, the venting of slanderous, treasonable, and advised Speeches and Positions, and the reproaching Our Person, Estate, and Government, and the resetting, supplying, aiding, assisting, intercommuning with, and doing Favours to denounced Rebels, or forfeited Traitors, are punishable by Forfeiture of Life, Land, and Goods; and particularly by the 134 Act of 8 Parl. King Jam. VI. it is statute and ordained, that none of our Subjects of whatsoever Degree, Estate, or Quality, shall presume or take upon Hand, privately or publickly, in Sermons, Declamations, or familiar Conferences, to utter any false, slanderous, or untrue Speeches, to the Disdain, Reproach, or Contempt of Us, Our Council or Proceedings, or to the Dishonour, Hurt, or Prejudice of Us, or to meddle in Our Affairs or Estate bygone, present, or in Time coming, under the Pain of Death, and Confiscation of Moveables. And by the 10 Act, 10 Parl. Jam. VI. it is statute and ordained, that all Our Subjects contain themselves in Quietness, and dutiful Obedience to Us, Our Government and Authority; and that none of them presume, or take upon Hand publickly to declaim, or privately to speak or write any Purpose of Reproach or Slander against Our Person, Estate or Government, or to deprave Our Laws and Acts of Parliament, or misconstrue Our Proceedings, whereby any Dislike may be moved betwixt Us, Our Nobility and loving Subjects, in Time coming, under the Pain of Death; and that these that do in the contrary shall be reputed as seditious and wicked Instruments, Enemies to Us, and the common Well of this Realm, and that the said Pain of Death shall be inflicted upon them with all Rigour, in Example of others. And by the Second Act, 2 Sess. of the 1 Parl. of King Char. II. We and Our Estates of Parliament do declare, that in these Positions that it is lawful for Subjects, upon Pretence of Reformation, or any other Pretence whatsoever, to enter into Leagues or Covenants, or to take up Arms against Us, or these commisionate by Us, or to put Limitations upon their due Obedience and Allegiance, are rebellious and treasonable; and that all Persons who shall, by writing, preaching, or other malicious and advised speaking, express these treasonable Intentions, shall be proceeded against, and adjudged Traitors, and shall suffer Forfeiture of Life, Lands, and Goods; likeas, by the 3 Act, 1 Parl. King Jam. I. and 37 Act of his 2 Parl. and by the 9 Act of 13 Parl. King Jam. II. and 144 Act, 12 Parl. Jam. VI. and divers and sundry other Laws and Acts of Parliament of this Our Kingdom, it is declared high Treason for any of Our Subjects to reset, supply, or intercommune with declared or forfeited Traitors, or give them Meat, Drink, House, Harbour, or any Relief or Comfort; and if they do in the contrary, they are to undergo the same Pains the said Traitors or Rebels ought to have sustained, if they had been apprehended.

Nevertheless, it is of Verity, that the said Doctor Gilbert Burnet, shaking off all Fear of God, Conscience, and Sense of Duty, Allegiance and Loyalty to Us his sovereign and native Prince, upon the Safety of whose Person and Maintenance of whose sovereign Authority and princely Power, the Happiness, Stability, and Quietness of Our Subjects depend, has most perfidiously and treasonably presumed to commit, and is guilty of the Crimes abovementioned, in so far as, Archibald Campbell, sometime Earl of Argyle, James Stuart Son to Sir

Sir James Stuart sometime Provost of Edinburgh, Mr. Robert Feigussan sometime Chaplain to the late Earl of Shaftesbury, Thomas Stuart of Culneth, William Denholm sometime of Westbels, Mr. Robert Martin sometime Clerk to Our Justice-court, and several other Rebels and Traitors, being most justly, by Our high Courts of Parliament and Justice-court, forfeited for the Crimes of Treason, and fled to Our Kingdom of England, and to Holland, Flanders, Geneva, and several other Places, the said Doctor Gilbert Burnet did upon the First, Second, and remanent Days of the Months of January, February, and remanent Months of the Years 1682, 1683, 1684. or January, February, March or April, 1685. converse, correspond, and intercommune with the said Archibald late Earl of Argyle, a forfeited Traitor, and that within the said Doctor Burnet his Dwelling-house, in Lincoln's Inn-fields, near the Plough-inn in Our City of London, or Suburbs thereof, or some other Part or Place within Our Kingdom of England, defamed, slandered and reproached, and advisedly spoke to the Disdain and Reproach of Our Person, Government, and Authority, wrote several Letters, and received Answers thereto, from the said forfeited Traitor, when he was in Holland or elsewhere, expressly contrary to his Duty and Allegiance to Us his sovereign Lord and King. And likewise, upon the First, Second, and Third Days of the Months of May, June, July, August, September, October, November, and December, 1685. and upon the First, Second, and Third Days of the Months of January, February, and remanent Months of the Year 1686. and First, Second, and Third Days of the Months of January, February, March, 1687. or any other of the Days of any or other of the said Months or Years, the said Doctor Gilbert Burnet did most treasonably refer, supplied, aided, assisted, conversed, and intercommuned with, and did Favours to the said James Stuart, Mr. Robert Fergusson, Thomas Stuart, William Denholm, and Mr. Robert Martin, forfeited Traitors and Rebels, in the Cities of Rotterdam, Amsterdam, Leyden, Breda, Geneva, or some other Part or Place within the Netherlands, or elsewhere, publicly and avowedly uttered several Speeches and Positions, to the Disdain of Our Person, Authority, and Government, continues and persists in such undutiful and treasonable Practices against Us and Our Government, ( We being his sovereign Lord and Prince ) expressly contrary to his Allegiance and Duty. By committing of the which Crimes above specified, or either of them, the said Doctor Burnet is guilty and culpable of the Crime of high Treason, and is Art and Part thereof, which being found by any Inquest, he ought and should suffer Forfeiture of Life, Land, and Goods, to the Terror and Example of others to commit the like hereafter. Our Will is therefore, and We charge you traitly and command, that incontinent, this Our Letter seen, ye pass, and in Our Name and Authority, command and charge the said Doctor Gilbert Burnet above complained upon, by Sound of Trumpet, with displayed Coat, and using other Solemnities necessary, to come and find sufficient Caution and Surety, acted in Our Books of Adjournal, that he shall compare before Our Lords Justice-general, Justice-clerk, and Commissioners of Justiciary, within the Tolbooth or criminal Court-house of Edinburgh, the Twenty seventh Day of June next to come, in the Hour of Cause, there to underly the Law for the Crimes abovementioned, and that under the Pains contained in the new Acts of Parliament ; and that ye charge him personally, if he can be apprehended, and failing thereof, at his Dwelling-house, and by open Proclamation at the Market-crofs of the head Burgh of the Shire, Stewartry, Regality, and other Jurisdiction where he dwells, to come and find the said Surety acted in Manner foresaid, within Six Days, if he be within this Our Kingdom ; and if he be out with the same, that ye command and charge him in Manner foresaid, by open Proclamation on at the Market-crofs of Edinburgh, Pier and Shore of Leith, to come and find the said Surety within Threescore Days next after he is charged by you thereto, under the Pain of Rebellion, and putting of him to Our Horn. Which Six and threescore Days respectively being bypast, and the said Surety not being found, nor no Intimation made by him to you of the finding thereof, that ye incontinent thereafter denounce him Our Rebel, and put him to Our Horn, escheat and bring in all his Moveables, Goods and Gear to Our Use, for his Contemption and Disobedience. And if he come and find the said Surety, Intimation being always made by him to you of the finding thereof, that Summons and Assize hereto, not exceeding the Number of Forty five Persons, together with such Witnesses who best know the Verity of the Premises, whose Names shall be given you in Roll, subscribed by the said Complainer, ilk Person under the Pain of an Hundred Merks. And that ye, within Fifteen Days after his Denunciation for not finding of Caution, cause registrate thir Our Letters, with your Executions thereof, in Our Books of Adjournal, conform to the Act of Parliament made thereanent, according to Justice, as ye will answer to Us thereupon. The which to do commits to you conjunctly and severally Our full Power, by thir Our Letters, delivering them to be by you duly executed, and indorsed again to the Bearer.

Doctor Burnet's Answer. No. CXXVI. B.

I Look upon it as a particular Misfortune, that I am forced to answer a Citation that is made in his Majesty's Name, which will be ever so sacred with me, that nothing but the Sense of an indispensable Duty could draw from me any Thing that looks like a contending with that sublime Character.

I owe the Defence of my own Innocence, and of my Reputation and Life, to my self; I owe also to all my Kindred and Friends, to my Religion, as I am a Christian and a Protestant, and to my Profession as I am a Churchman, and above all to his Majesty as I am his born Subject, such a Vindication of my Loyalty and Integrity, as may make it appear, that my not going to Scotland, according to the Tenor of this Citation, does not flow from any Sense of Guilt or Fear, but merely from those Engagements under which I am in Holland.

I hope my contradicting or refuting the Matters of Fact set forth in this Citation, shall not be so maliciously perverted by any, as if I meant either to reflect on his Majesty for writing to his Council of Scotland, ordering this Citation to be made, or on his Advocate for forming it, and issuing it out: But as I acknowledge, that upon the Information it seems was offered of those Matters here laid against me, it was very reasonable for his Majesty to order Justice to be done upon me; so his Advocate, in whose Hands those Informations it seems are now put, had all possible Reason to lay them against me, as he has done; and therefore I will not pretend to make any Exception to the Laws and Acts of Parliament set forth in the first Part of this Citation; but I will only answer the Matters of Fact laid to my Charge, and whatsoever I say concerning them, does only belong to my false Accusers; and therefore I hope they will not be looked on as Things in which even his Majesty's Advocate, but much less his sacred Majesty is any way concerned.

I am first accused for having seen, conversed with, and held Correspondence with the late Earl of Argyle; and to make this appear the more probable, the Place is marked very critically where I lived, and where, as it is pretended, we met: But it is now almost Two Years since the late Argyle was taken, and suffered, and that a full Account was had of all his secret Practices, in all which I have not been once so much as mentioned, tho' it is now a Year since I have lived and preached openly in these Provinces. The Truth is, that for Nine Years before the late Earl of Argyle's Forfeiture, I had no Sort of Correspondence with him, nor did I ever see him since the Year 1676. After his Escape out of Prison, I never saw him, nor wrote to him, nor heard from him, nor had I any Sort of Commerce with him, directly nor indirectly; the Circumstance of my House, and the Place wherein I lived is added, to make the Thing look somewhat probable: But tho' it is very easy to know where I lived, and I having dwelt in Lincoln-inn-fields the Space of Seven Years, it was no hard Matter to add this Particular; yet so inconsiderate is the Malice of my Enemies, that even in this it leads them out of the Way; for soon after Argyle's Escape, and during the Stay that, as is believed, he made in London, I had removed from Lincoln-inn-fields into Brook-buildings, this makes me guess at the Informer, who saw me often in the one House, but never in the other; and yet even he who has betrayed all that ever past between us, has not Impudence enough to charge me with the least Disloyalty, tho' I concealed very few of my Thoughts from him.

With this of my seeing the late Argyle, the Article of the scandalous and treasonable Words, pretended to be spoken by me to him, against his Majesty's Person and Government, falls to the Ground: It is obvious that this cannot be proved, since Argyle is dead; and it is not pretended, that these Words were uttered in the hearing of other Witnesses, nor is it needful to add that his Majesty was then only a Subject, so that any Words spoken of him at that Time cannot amount to Treason; but I can appeal to all these with whom I have ever conversed, if they have ever heard me fail in the Respect I owed the King: And I can easily bring many Witnesses, from several Parts of Europe, of the Zeal with which I have on all Occasions expressed my self on those Subjects; and that none of all those hard Words that have been so freely bestowed on me has made me forget my Duty in the least.

I am in the next Place accused of Correspondence with James Stuart, Mr. Robert Fergusson, Thomas Stuart, William Denholm, and Mr. Robert Martin, since my coming out of England; and that I have entertained them and supplied them in foreign Parts, particularly in the Cities of Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Leyden, Breda, Geneva, or in some other Parts within the Netherlands. This Article is so very ill laid in all its Branches, that it shews my Enemies have very ill Informations concerning my most general Acquaintance, since, tho' there are amongst those who are condemned for Treason, some that are of my Kindred and ancient Acquaintance, they have here cast together a Company of Men, who are all (James Stuart only excepted) absolutely unknown to me, whom I never saw, and with whom I never exchanged one Word in my whole Life, as far as I can remember; one of them, Mr. Robert Martin, was, as I ever understood it, dead above a Year before I left England; as for James Stuart, I had a general Acquaintance with him Twenty Years ago, but have had no Commerce with him now for many Years, unless it was that I saw him twice by accident, and that was several Years before there was any Sentence past on him: My Accusers know my Motion ill, for I have not been in Breda these Twenty three Years. I settled in the Hague upon my coming into Holland, because I was willing to be under the Observation of his Majesty's Envoy: And I chose this Place the rather, because it was known that none of those that lay under Sentences come to it. I have never gone to Amsterdam or Rotterdam in secret, and have never been there but upon my private Affairs, and that never above a Night or Two at a Time, and I have been so visible all the while that I was in these Places, that I thought there was not room left even for Calumny.

In the last Place, it is said that I have publicly and avowedly uttered several Speeches and Positions to the Disdain of his Majesty's Person, Authority, and Government, and that I continue and persist in these treasonable Practices; this is so generally asserted, that it is enough for me to say, it is positively false: But I have yet clearer Evidence to the contrary of this; I have preached a whole Sermon in the Hague, against all treasonable Doctrines and Practices, and particularly against the Lawfulness of Subjects rising in Arms against their Sovereign, upon the account of Religion; and I have maintained this so oft both in publick and and private, that I could, if I thought it convenient, give Proofs of it, that would make all my Enemies be ashamed of their Injustice and Malice.

The Witnesses cited against me are, first, Sir John Cochran, whom I have not seen above these Four Years last past, and with whom I have had no Sort of Commerce since I saw him. It is almost Two Years since he had his Pardon, so it is probable he then told all that he has ever told concerning me; and it is not likely that the Matter would have been let ly sleeping all this while, if he had said any thing to my Prejudice. I confess I have been long acquainted with him; I look upon him as a Man of Honour, and I reckon my self so safe in his Honour, and in my Innocence, that I do freely release him from all the Obligations of Friendship and Confidence, and wish that he may declare every thing that has ever past between us; for then I am sure he will do me the Right to own, that as oft as we talked of some Things that were complained of in Scotland, I took the Occasion to repeat my Opinion of the Duty of Subjects, to submit and bear all the ill Administrations that might be in the Government, but never to rise in Arms upon that account. The next Witness is his Son, whom I never saw but once or twice, and with whom I never entred into any Discourse, but what became a Man of my Profession to so young a Person, exhorting him to the Duties of a Christian. The next Two are Mr. West and Mr. Burn, whose Faces I do not know; after them come Mr. Carstairs and Mr. Baird, whose Faces I know not either. It seems these are the Witnesses to be led against me, for the Article relating to the Netherlands; but as I am wholly a Stranger to Mr. Carstairs, so I do not so much as know if there be such a Person in Being as Mr. Baxter; I have had no Correspondence at all with him, these Two and twenty Years, unless it was, that once or twice I met him by Accident, in a Visit in a third Place, and that once, about Six Years ago, I went to discourse with him concerning a Matter of History, in which we differed; but as all our Conversation at that Time, was in the Presence of some Witnesses, so it was not at all relating to Matters of State.

And now I have gone over all the Matter that is laid against me in this Citation, and have made such Reflections both on the Facts that are alledged, and the Witnesses that are named, as will, I hope, satisfy even my Enemies themselves, of the Falshood and Injustice of these Informations; so that I presume so far on his Majesty's Justice, as to expect that all the Indignation which is kindled against me, will be turned upon my false Accusers.

To all this I will add one Thing further, for my Justification, tho' I am fully satisfied it is that which I am not obliged to do, and which, if I were in other Circumstances, I would not do my self, as I would advise no other Man to do it: For it is a Part of that Right that every Man has, to preserve himself by all lawful Ways, that he do not accuse himself, and, by Consequence, that he do not purge himself by Oath; of Matters objected to him; and I do not so well approve of the Courts of Inquisition, as to give Countenance to a Practice which was first set on foot by them, of requiring Men to answer upon Oath to Matters objected to them. If I were not a Church-man, I would not do this which I am about to do, as I declare I will never do it again, let my Enemies lay to my Charge what they please; but the Regard I have to this sacred Function to which I am dedicated, makes me now, once for all, offer this solemn Purgation of my self. I attest the great God, the Searcher of all Things, and the Judge of all Men, that all the Matters of Fact laid to my Charge in this Citation, are utterly groundless and absolutely false. This I am ready to confirm with my corporal Oath, and to receive the Sacrament upon it.

And now I hope I have said enough to satisfy his Majesty concerning my Innocence, so that I am confident he will not only discharge all further Proceedings against me upon this Accusation, but that he will express his Royal Displeasure against my false Accusers: But if the Power of my Enemies, and their Credit with his Majesty, is still so great, that this Matter shall be carried further, and that Advantage shall be taken from my not appearing in Scotland, to proceed to a Sentence against me, which some brutal Men now in the Hague, are threatening before-hand, that they will execute it, I then make my most humble Appeal to the great God, the King of Kings, who knows my Innocence, and to whom my Blood will cry for Vengeance against all that may be any way concerned in the shedding of it: He will, at the great Day, judge all Men righteously, without Respect of Persons; it is to him that I flee, who, I am sure, will hear me. Judge me, O God, according to the Integrity that is in me.

JAMES, by the Grace of GOD, &c. Greeting. Forasmuch as it is humbly meant or complained to Us, by Our right trusty and familiar Counsellor, Sir John Dalrymple the younger of Stair, Our Advocate for Our Interest, upon Dr. Gilbert Burnet: That where, by the common Law, by the Acts of Parliament, and the municipal Laws of this Kingdom, the declining or impugning Our sovereign Authority, or putting treasonable Limitations upon the Prerogatives of Our Crown, upon the native Allegiance due by any of Our Subjects, born Scotsmen, whether residing within Our Dominions or not, are declared to be high Treason, and punishable by the Pains due and determined in the Law for Treason. Nevertheless it is of Verity, that Dr. Gilbert Burnet, who is a Scotsman by Birth and Education, being cited at the Pier and Shore of Leith, at the Instance of Our Advocate, for several treasonable Crimes, to underly the Law, by virtue of particular Command from Us, direct to the Lords of Our Privy Council, and an Act of Our said Privy Council hereupon, ordering Our Advocate to intent the Process; instead of appearing before the Lords of Justiciary, Dr. Gilbert Burnet did write and subscribe a Letter, dated at the Hague the Third Day of May last, directed for the Earl of Middleton, one of our principal Secretaries of State for Our Kingdom of England: In the which, the said Dr. shews, that in respect the Affairs of the united Provinces fall to his Lordship's Share in the Ministry, therefore he makes the following Addreses to his Lordship, and by him to Us, and gives an Account that he is certiorate of the Process of Treason executed against him, at the Instance of Our Advocate; and, for Answer thereto, the Dr. writes, That he has been Thirteen Years out of the Kingdom of Scotland, and that he is now upon the Point of marrying in the Netherlands, and that he is naturalized by the States of Holland, and that thereby, during his Stay there, his Allegiance is translated from Us to the Sovereignty of the Province of Holland; and, in the End of his Letter, he certifies, that if this Declinature be not taken off his Hand, to sist the Process, he will appear in Print in his own Detence, and will not so far betray his own Innocence, as to suffer a Thing of that Nature to pass upon him, in which he will make a Recital of Affairs that have passed these Twenty Years, and a vast Number of Particulars, which he believes will be displeasing to Us; and therefore desires, that he may not be forced to it, which is a direct declining of Our Authority, denying of his Allegiance to Us, and asserting, that his Allegiance is translated from Us to the Sovereignty of the States of Holland, and a threatening Us to expose, traduce, disparage, and bely Our Government, and the publick Affairs for Twenty Years past; tho' he acknowledges it will be displeasing to Us, yet, by a most indiscreet and disloyal Insolence, he threatens to do it in Contempt, except forsooth We will acquiesce, and suffer the Declinature of Our Royal Authority, and pass from the Process, as having no Allegiance due to Us from the Dr. &c. in common Form.

JAMES, by the Grace of GOD, King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith: Macers
 To
 of Our Privy Council, or Messengers at Arms, Our Sheriffs in that Parr, conjunctly and severally, specially constitute, and to all and sundry Our Lieges and Subjects, whom it effects, Greeting: Whereas We have, by Our Proclamation, of the Twentieth of February last past, and Our other Proclamation of the Twenty eighth of June thereafter, explaining and extending the same in favours of all Our Subjects of this Kingdom, of whatsoever Profession, granted full Liberty to them to meet, and serve God in their own Way and Manner, on the Terms therein expressly mentioned: Yet We understanding, that several seditious Preachers, and others, declared Fugitives, do, nevertheless of that Our great and unexpected Clemency and Favour, meet in the open Fields, and there keep Conventicles, (these Rendevouzes of Rebellion) and that great Numbers of Persons of all Sorts, do frequent these seditious Meetings, and many in Arms. We have thought fit therefore, with Advice of Our Privy Council, hereby to declare, that not only all such Persons, (whether Preachers or Hearers, that shall presume to be at any Conventicle in the open Fields) but also all dissenting Ministers, who shall take upon them to preach in Houses, without observing such Directions as are prescribed by Our said late Proclamation, viz. That nothing be preached or taught among them, which may any way tend to alienate the Hearts of Our People from Us or Our Government, and that their Meetings be peaceable, openly and publicly held, and all Persons freely admitted to them, and that they do signify and make known to some one or more of Our next Privy Counsellors, Sheriffs, Stewarts, Bailies, Justices of Peace, or Magistrates of Royal Burrows, what Place or Places they set apart for these Uses, with the Names of the Preachers; shall be prosecuted with the utmost Rigour and Severity, that Our Laws, Acts of Parliament, and Constitutions of this Our ancient Kingdom, will allow: Requiring hereby all Our Officers, civil and military, and all other Our good Subjects, who are or may be any way concerned in the Execution thereof, to see this Our Royal Will and Pleasure duly performed, and put in Execution, conform to Our said Laws, Acts of Parliament, and Constitutions aforesaid, every manner of way, as is thereby prescribed, and under the Pains and Certifications therein mentioned: And to the end Our said Proclamation, of the Twenty eighth of June last, may receive due Obedience, We, with Advice aforesaid, do strictly require all such as shall preach, by virtue thereof, at any Time, or in any Place, to make Intimation of their Preaching, as to the Time and Place, before their Meetings, to some one or more of Our next Privy Counsellors, Sheriffs, Stewarts, Bailies, Justices of Peace, or Magistrates of Our Royal Burrows, and of their fixing their Abodes there, which shall be sufficient to them during their Residence at that Place or Places only. And in case they be transient Preachers, that they give the same Intimation to some one or more of Our Privy Council, or others aforesaid, both, as they will be answerable. And further, We, in prosecution of Our said late Proclamation, do hereby require all and every Person aforesaid, to whom such Intimation shall be given, respective, to send in to the Clerks of Our Privy Council, once every Month, the Name and Surname of the Persons Preachers, and the Times and Places of their Meetings, as they will answer the contrary at their Peril. And that Our Royal Pleasure in the Premises may be known, and due and exact Obedience given thereto, Our Will is herefore, and We charge you strictly and command, that incontinent, these Our Letters seen, ye pass to the Market-cross of Edinburgh, and all the other Market-crosses of the head Burghs of the Shires of this Kingdom, and other Places needful, and there, in Our Name and Authority, by open Proclamation, make Publication of Our Pleasure in the Premises, that none may pretend Ignorance.

King's

King's Letter to the Council, February 12. 1687. N<sup>o</sup>. CXXVIII.

JAMES R.

Right trusty and right well-beloved Cousin and Counsellor, Right trusty and right well-beloved Counsellor, Right trusty and entirely beloved Cousins and Counsellors, Right trusty and right well-beloved Cousins and Counsellors, Right trusty and well-beloved Cousins and Counsellors, Right trusty and well-beloved Counsellors, and trusty and well-beloved Counsellors, We greet you well. Whereas, by Our Letter of the Twenty first Day of August last past, We were graciously pleased to inform you of Our Designs, in order to the Ease of Our Roman Catholick Subjects, unto which We had your dutiful Answer in some Days thereafter; We have now thought fit to publish these Our Royal Intentions, and to give an additional Ease to those of tender Consciences, so to convince the World of Our Inclinations to Moderation, and to evidence that those of the Clergy who have been regular, are Our most particular Care, though We have given some Ease to those whose Principles We can with any Safety trust: We have at the same Time expressed Our highest Indignation against those Enemies of Christianity, as well as Government and human Society, the Field-conventiclers, whom We recommend to you to root out with all the Severities of Our Laws, and with the most vigorous Prosecution of Our Forces, it being equally Our, and Our People's Concern, to be rid of them. As for the other Particulars of Our Royal Proclamation here inclosed, We doubt not but they will appear to you most just and reasonable, as they do to Us, and that you will, in your respective Capacities, assert and defend Our Royal Rights and Prerogatives, which We are resolved to maintain in that Splendor and Greatness, which can only make them safe for Us, Supports for Our Friends, and Terrors to Our Enemies. It is evident, We do not mean to inroach on the Consciences of any, and what We will not do, We are resolved not to suffer in others: And therefore it is Our Will and Pleasure, that these Our Commands be forthwith obeyed, and that, in order thereunto, this Our Proclamation be forthwith printed and published, in the usual Manner in such Cases accustomed: And if any shall be so bold as to shew any Dislike of this Our Procedure, We desire to be informed thereof by you, to the end We may convince the World that We are in earnest, assuring all, that as We expect Obedience therein, and a Readiness from you and all Our Judicatures, to assert Our Rights, so it shall be Our Care on all Occasions, to shew Our Royal Favours to all of you in general, and to every one in particular. For doing all these Things, as well contained in this Our Letter as in Our Proclamation aforesaid, these Presents shall be to you, and all others respectively, who may be therein any way concerned, a sufficient Warrant; and so We bid you heartily Farewel.

Given at Our Court at Whitehall the 12 Day of February 1687, and of Our Reign the Third Year.

By his Majesty's Command.

JAMES R.

JAMES VII. by the Grace of God, King of Scotland, England, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To all and sundry Our good Subjects, whom these Presents do or may concern, Greeting. We having taken into Our Royal Consideration the many and great Inconveniencies which have happened to that Our ancient Kingdom of Scotland of late Years, through the different Perswasions in the Christian Religion, and the great Heats and Animosities amongst the several Professors thereof, to the Ruin and Decay of Trade, wasting of Lands, extinguishing of Charity, Contempt of the Royal Power, and converting of true Religion, and the Fear of God, into Animosities, Name, Factions, and sometimes into Sacrilege and Treason; and being resolved, as much as in Us lies, to unite the Hearts and Affections of Our Subjects, to God in Religion, to Us in Loyalty, and to their Neighbours in Christian Love and Charity, have therefore thought fit to grant, and by Our sovereign Authority, Prerogative Royal, and absolute Power, which all Our Subjects are to obey without Reserve, do hereby give and grant Our Royal Toleration, to the several Professors of the Christian Religion afternamed, with, and under the several Conditions, Restrictions and Limitations aftermentioned. In the first Place, We allow and tolerate the moderate Presbyterians, to meet in their private Houses, and there to hear all such Ministers, as either have, or are willing to accept of Our Indulgence allenarly, and none other, and that there be not any Thing said or done contrary to the Well and Peace of Our Reign, seditious or treasonable, under the highest Pains these Crimes will import; nor are they to presume to build Meeting-houses, or to use Our-houses or Barns, but only to exercise in their private Houses, as said is. In the mean Time, it is Our Royal Will and Pleasure, that Field-conventicles, and such as preach or exercise at them, or who shall any wise assist or connive at them, shall be prosecuted according to the utmost Severity of Our Laws made against them, seeing, from these Rendezvous of Rebellion, so much Disorder hath proceeded, and so much Disturbance to the Government, and for which, after this Our Royal Indulgence for tender Consciences, there is no Excuse left. In like Manner, We do hereby tolerate Quakers, to meet and exercise in their Form, in any Place or Places appointed for their Worship. And considering the severe and cruel Laws made against Roman Catholicks (therein called Papists)

Papists) in the Minority of Our Royal Grandfather of glorious Memory, without his Consent, and contrary to the Duty of good Subjects, by his Regents, and other Enemies to their lawful Sovereign, Our Royal great Grandmother Queen Mary of blessed and pious Memory, wherein, under the Pretence of Religion, they clothed the worst of Treasons, Factions and Usurpations, and made these Laws, not as against the Enemies of God, but their own; which Laws have still been continued of Course, without Design of executing them, or any of them, ad terrorem only, on Supposition, that the Papists, relying on an external Power, were incapable of Duty and true Allegiance to their natural Sovereigns, and rightful Monarchy. We, of Our certain Knowledge, and long Experience, knowing that the Catholicks, as it is their Principle to be good Christians, so it is to be dutiful Subjects, and that they have likewise on all Occasions, shewn themselves good and faithful Subjects to Us, and Our royal Predecessors, by hazarding, and many of them, actually losing their Lives and Fortunes, in their Defence, (though of another Religion) and the Maintenance of their Authority, against the Violences and Treasons of the most violent Abettors of these Laws, do therefore, with Advice and Consent of Our Privy Council, by Our sovereign Authority, Prerogative Royal, and absolute Power aforesaid, suspend, stop and disable all Laws or Acts of Parliament, Customs or Constitutions, made or executed against any of Our Roman Catholick Subjects, in any Time past, to all Intents and Purposes, making void all Prohibitions therein mentioned, Pains or Penalties therein ordained to be inflicted, so that they shall, in all Things, be as free, in all Respects, as any of Our Protestant Subjects whatsoever, not only to exercise their Religion, but to enjoy all Offices, Benefices and others, which We shall think fit to bestow upon them in all Time coming: Nevertheless it is Our Will and Pleasure, and We do hereby command all Catholicks, at their highest Pains, only to exercise their religious Worship in Houses or Chapels, and that they presume not to preach in the open Fields, or to invade the Protestant Churches by Force, under the Pains aforesaid, to be inflicted upon the Offenders respectively, nor shall they presume to make publick Processions in the High-streets of any of Our Royal Burghs, under the Pains abovementioned. And whereas the Obedience and Service of Our good Subjects is due to Us by their Allegiance, and Our Sovereignty, and that no Law, Custom or Constitution, Difference in Religion, or other Impediment whatsoever, can exempt or discharge the Subjects from their native Obligations and Duty to the Crown, or hinder Us from protecting and employing them, according to their several Capacities, and Our Royal Pleasure, nor restrain Us from conferring heritable Rights and Privileges upon them, or vacuate or annul these Rights heritable, when they are made or conferred: And likewise considering, that some Oaths are capable of being wrested by Men of sinister Intentions, a Practice, in that Kingdom, fatal to Religion, as it was to Loyalty, do therefore, with Advice and Consent aforesaid, cass, annul and discharge all Oaths whatsoever, by which any of Our Subjects are incapacitated, or disabled from holding Places or Offices in Our said Kingdom, or enjoying their hereditary Rights and Privileges, discharging the same to be taken or given in any Time coming, without Our special Warrant and Consent, under the Pains due to the Contempt of Our Royal Commands and Authority; and, to this effect, We do, by Our Royal Authority aforesaid, stop, disable and dispense with all Laws enjoying the said Oaths, Tests, or any of them, particularly the First Act of the First Session of the First Parliament of King Charles II. the Eleventh Act of the foresaid Session of the foresaid Parliament, the Sixth Act of the Third Parliament of the said King Charles, the Twenty first and Twenty fifth Acts of that Parliament, and the Thirteenth Act of the First Session of Our late Parliament, in so far alienarily as concerns the taking the Oaths or Tests therein prescribed, and all others, as well not mentioned as mentioned, and that, in place of them, all Our good Subjects, or such of them as We, or Our Privy Council shall require so to do, shall take and swear the following Oath alienarily.

I A. B. do acknowledge, testify and declare, that James VII. by the Grace of God, King of Scotland, England, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. is rightful King, and supreme Governor of these Realms, and over all Persons therein, and that it is unlawful for Subjects, on any Pretence, or for any Cause whatsoever, to rise in Arms against him, or any commissioned by him, and that I shall never so rise in Arms, nor assist any who shall so do, and that I shall never resist his Power or Authority, nor ever oppose his Authority, to his Person, as I shall answer to God, but shall, to the utmost of my Power, assist, defend and maintain him, his Heirs and lawful Successors, in the Exercise of their absolute Power and Authority, against all deadly. So help me God.

And seeing many of Our good Subjects have, before Our Pleasure, in these Matters, was made publick, incurred the Guilt appointed by the Acts of Parliament above mentioned, or others, We, by Our Authority, and absolute Power, and Prerogative Royal abovementioned, of Our certain Knowledge, and innate Mercy, give Our ample and full Indemnity to all those of the Roman Catholick or Popish Religion, for all Things by them done contrary to Our Laws or Acts of Parliament, made in any Time past, relating to their Religion, the Worship and Exercise thereof, or for being Papists, Jesuits, or Traffickers, for hearing, or saying of Mass, concealing of Priests, or Jesuits, breeding their Children Catholicks, at home or abroad, or any other Thing, Rite or Doctrine, said, performed or maintained by them, or any of them, and likewise for holding or taking of Places, Employments, or Offices, contrary to any Law or Constitution, Advices given to Us, or Our Council, Actions done, or generally any Thing performed or said against the known Laws of that Our ancient Kingdom; excepting always from this Our Royal Indemnity, all Murders, Assassinations, Thefts, and such like other Crimes, which never used to be comprehended in Our general Acts of Indemnity. And We command and require all Our Judges, or others concerned, to explain this in the most ample Sense and Meaning Acts of Indemnity at any Time have contained; declaring this shall be as good to every one concerned, as if they had Our Royal Pardon and Remission under Our great Seal of that Kingdom. And likewise indemnifying Our Protestant Subjects, from all Pains and Penalties due for hearing or preaching in Houses, providing there be no treasonable Speeches uttered, in the said Conventicles, by them, in which Case the Law is only to take place against the guilty, and none other present, providing also that they reveal to any of Our Council the Guilt so committed; as also excepting all Fines, or Effects of Sentences already given. And likewise indemnifying fully and freely all Quakers, for their Meetings and Worship, in all Time past, preceeding the Date of these Presents, and We doubt not but Our Protestant Subjects will give their Assistance and Concourse hereunto, on all Occasions, in their respective Capacities: In Consideration whereof, and the Ease those of Our Religion, and others, may have hereby, and for the Encouragement of Our Protestant Bishops, and the regular Clergy, and such as have hitherto lived orderly, We think fit to declare, that it never was Our Principle, nor will We ever suffer Violence to be offered ferred to any Man's Conscience, nor will We use Force, or invincible Necessity against any Man on the account of his Perswasion, nor the Protestant Religion, but will protect Our Bishops and other Ministers in their Functions, Rights and Properties, and all Our Protestant Subjects in the free Exercise of their Protestant Religion in the Churches; and that We will, and hereby promise, on Our Royal Word, to maintain the Possessors of Church-lands formerly belonging to Abbays, or other Churches of the Catholick Religion, in their full and free Possession and Right, according to Our Laws and Acts of Parliament, in that behalf, in all Time coming; and We will imploy indifferently all Our Subjects, of all Perswasions, so as none shall meet with any Discouragement on the account of his Religion, but be advanced and esteemed by Us, according to their several Capacities and Qualifications, so long as We find Charity and Unity maintained; and if any Animosities shall arise, as We hope in God there will not, We will shew the severest Effects of Our Royal Displeasure against the Beginners or Fomenters thereof, seeing thereby Our Subjects may be deprived of this general Ease and Satisfaction We intend to all of them, whose Happiness, Prosperity, Wealth and Safety is so much Our Royal Care, that We will leave nothing undone which may procure these Blessings for them. And lastly, to the end all Our good Subjects may have notice of this Our Royal Will and Pleasure, We do hereby command Our Lyon King at Arms, and his Brethren, Heralds, Maces, Pursuivants, and Messengers at Arms, to make timeous Proclamation thereof at the Market-crofs of Edinburgh; and besides the printing and publishing of this Our Royal Proclamation, it is Our expresse Will and Pleasure, that the same be past under the great Seal of that Our Kingdom per saltum, without passing any other Seal or Register. In order whereunto, this shall be to the Directors of Our Chancellery, and their Deputes for writing the same, and to Our Chancellor for causing Our great Seal aforesaid to be appended thereunto, a sufficient Warrant.

Given at Our Court at Whitehall, the Twelfth Day of February, 1685. and of Our Reign the Third Year.

By his Majesty's Command,

M E L F O R D.

God save the King.

Some Reflections on the foresaid Proclamation. N<sup>o</sup>. CXXX.

I. THE Preamble of a Proclamation is oft writ in Haste, and is the Flourish of some wanton Pen, but one of such an extraordinary Nature as this is, was probably more severely examined. There is a new Designation of his Majesty's Authority, here set forth, of his absolute Power, which is so often repeated, that it deserves to be a little searched into. Prerogative Royal, and sovereign Authority are Terms already received and known, but for this absolute Power, as it is a new Term, so those who have coined it, may make it signify what they will. The Roman Law speaks of princeps legibus solutus, and absolute in its natural Signification, importing the being without all Ties and Restraints; then the true Meaning of this seems to be, that there is an inherent Power in the King, which can neither be restrained by Laws, Promises, nor Oaths; for nothing less than the being free from all these, renders a Power absolute.

II. If the former Term seemed to stretch our Allegiances, that which comes after it, is yet a Step of another Nature, tho' one can hardly imagine what can go beyond absolute Power, and it is in these Words, which all Our Subjects are to obey without Reserve. And this is the carrying Obedience many Sizes beyond what the Grand Seigneur has ever yet claimed: For all Princes, even the most violent Pretenders to absolute Power, till till Lewis the Great's Time, have thought it enough to oblige their Subjects to submit to their Power, and to bear whatsoever they thought good to impose upon them; but till the Days of the late Conversions by the Dragoons, it was never so much as pretended, that Subjects were bound to obey their Princes without Reserve, and to be of his Religion, because he would have it so, which was the only Argument that those late Apostles made use of: So it is probable this Qualification of the Duty of Subjects was put in here, to prepare us for a terrible le Roy le veut; and in that Case we are told here, that we must obey without Reserve: And when those severe Orders come, the Privy Council, and all such as execute this Proclamation, will be bound, by this Declaration, to shew themselves more forward than any others, to obey without Reserve, and those poor Pretensions of Conscience, Religion, Honour and Reason, will be then reckoned as Reserves upon their Obedience, which are all now shut out.

III. These being the Grounds upon which this Proclamation is founded, we ought not only to consider what Consequences are now drawn from them, but what may be drawn from them at any Time hereafter; for if they are of Force, to justify that which is now inferred from them, it will be full as just to draw, from the same Premises, an Abolition of the Protestant Religion, of the Rights of the Subjects, not only to Church-lands, but to all Property whatsoever. In a Word, it asserts a Power to be in the King, to command what he will, and an Obligation in the Subjects, to obey whatsoever he shall command.

IV. There is also Mention made, in the Preamble, of the Christian Love and Charity, which his Majesty would have established among Neighbours; but another Dash of a Pen, founded on this absolute Power, may declare us all Hereticks; and then in wonderful Charity to us, we must be told, that we are either to obey without Reserve, or to be burnt without Reserve. We know the Charity of that Church pretty well; it is indeed fervent and burning: And if we have forgot what has been done in former Ages, France, Spain, and Hungary have set before our Eyes very fresh Instances of the Charity of that Religion. While those Examples are so green, it is a little too imposing on us, to talk to us of Christian Love and Charity. No doubt his Majesty means sincerely, and his Exactness to all his Promises, chiefly to those made since he came to the Crown, will not suffer us to think an unbecoming Thought of his royal Intentions; but yet after all, tho' it seems, by this Proclamation, that we are bound to obey without Reserve, it is Hardship upon Hardship to be bound to believe without Reserve.

V. There are a Sort of People here tolerated, that will be very hardly found out, and these are the moderate Presbyterians. Now, as some say that there are very few of those People in Scotland that deserve this Character, so it is hard to tell what it amounts to; and the calling any of them immoderate, cuts off all their Share in this Grace. Moderation is a Quality that lies in the Mind, and how this will be found out, I cannot so readily guess. If a Standard had been given of Opinions or Practices, then one could have known how this might have been distinguished; but as it lies, it will not be easy to make the Discrimination; and the declaring them all immoderate, shuts them out quite.

VI. Another Foundation laid down for repealing all Laws made against the Papists, is, that they were enacted in King James VI's Minority, with some harsh Expressions, that are not to be insisted on, since they shew more the Heat of the Penner, than the Dignity of the Prince, in whose Name they are given out; but all these Laws were ratified over and over again by King James, when he came to be of full Age: And they have received many Confirmations by King Charles I. and King Charles II. as well as by his present Majesty, both when he represented his Brother in the Year 1681. and since he himself came to the Crown: So that whatsoever may be said concerning the first Formation of those Laws they have received now for the Course of a whole hundred Years, that are lapsed since King James was of full Age, so many Confirmations, that if there is any Thing certain in human Government, we might depend upon them; but this new coined absolute Power must carry all before it.

VII. It is also well known, that the whole Settlement of the Church-lands and Tithes, with many other Things, and more particularly the Establishment of the Protestant Religion, was likewise enacted, in King James's Minority, as well as those penal Laws: So that the Reason now made use of, to annul the penal Laws, will serve full as well for another Act of this absolute Power, that shall abolish all those; and if Maxims that unhinge all the Securities of human Society, and all that is sacred in Government, ought to be looked on with the justest and deepest Prejudices possible, one is tempted to lose the Respect that is due to every Thing that carries a royal Stamp upon it, when he sees such Grounds made use of, as must shake all Settlements whatsoever; for if a Prescription of 120 Years, and Confirmations reiterated over and over again these 100 Years past, do not purge some Defects in the first Formation of those Laws, what can make us secure? But this looks so like a Fetch of the French prerogative Law, both in their Processes with relation to the Edict of Nantz, and those concerning Dependences at Mentz, that this seems to be a Copy from that famous Original.

VIII. It were too much ill Nature to look into the History of the last Age, to examine on what Grounds those Characters of pious and blessed given to the Memory of Queen Mary are built; but since King James's Memory has the Character of glorious given to it, if the Civility due to the fair Sex makes one unwilling to look into the one, yet the other may be a little dwelt on. The peculiar Glory that belongs to King James's Memory, is, that he was a Prince of great Learning, and that he employed it chiefly in writing for his Religion. Of the Volume in Folio, in which we have his Works, two Thirds are against the Church of Rome; one Part of them is a Commentary on the Revelation, proving that the Pope is Antichrist; another Part of them belonged more naturally to his Post and Dignity, which is the Warning that he gave to all the Princes and States of Europe, against the treasonable and bloody Doctrines of the Papacy. The first Act he did when he came of Age, was to swear in Person, with all his Family, and afterwards with all his People of Scotland, a Covenant containing an Enumeration of all the Points of Popery, and a most solemn Renunciation of them, somewhat like our Parliament Test. His first Speech to the Parliament of England was copious on the same Subject: And he left a Legacy of a Wish on such of his Posterity as should go over to that Religion, which in good Manners is suppressed. It is known, King James was no Conqueror, and that he made more use of his Pen than his Sword: So the Glory that is peculiar to his Memory, must fall chiefly on his learned and immortal Writings: And since there is such a Veneration expressed for him, it agrees not ill with this, to wish that his Works were more studied by those who offer such Incense to his glorious Memory.

IX. His Majesty assures his People of Scotland, upon his certain Knowledge and long Experience, that the Catholics, as they are good Christians, so they are likewise dutiful Subjects: But if we must believe both these equally, then we must conclude severely against their being good Catholics; for we are sure they can never be good Subjects, not only to an heretical Prince, but even to a Catholick Prince, if he does not extirpate Hereticks; for their beloved Council of the Lateran, that decreed Transubstantiation, has likewise decreed, that if a Prince does not extirpate Hereticks out of his Dominions, the Pope must depose him, and declare his Subjects absolved from their Allegiance, and give his Dominions to another: So that even his Majesty, how much soever he may be a zealous Catholick, yet cannot be assured of their Fidelity to him, unless he has given them secret Assurances, that he is resolved to extirpate Hereticks out of his Dominions, and that all the Promises which he now makes to these poor Wretches, are no other way to be kept, than the Assurances which the great Lewis gave to his Protestant Subjects, of his observing still the Edict of Nantz, even after he had resolved to break it, and also his last Promise made in the Edict that repealed the Edict of Nantz, by which he gave Assurances, that no Violence should be used to any for their Religion, in the very Time that he was ordering all possible Violences to be put in Execution against them.

X. His Majesty assures us, that on all Occasions the Papists have shewed themselves good and faithful Subjects to him and his royal Predecessors; but how absolute soever the King's Power may be, it seems his Knowledge of History is not so absolute, but it may be capable of some Improvement. It will be hard to find out what Loyalty they shewed on the Occasion of the Gun-powder Plot, or during the whole Progress of the Rebellion of Ireland. If the King will either take the Words of King James of glorious Memory, or King Charles I. that was indeed of pious and blessed Memory, rather than the Word of the Penners of this Proclamation, it will not be hard to find Occasions where they were a little wanting in this their so much boasted Loyalty: And we are sure, that by the Principles of that Religion, the King can never be assured of the Fidelity of those he calls his Catholick Subjects, but by engaging to them to make his heretical Subjects Sacrifices to their Rage.

XI. The King declares them capable of all the Offices and Benefices which he shall think fit to bestow on them, and only restrains them from invading the Protestant Churches by Force: So that here a Door is plainly opened for admitting them to the Exercise of their Religion in Protestant Churches, so they do not break into them by Force; and whatsoever may be the Sense of the Term Benefices, in its ancient and first Signification, nification, now it stands only for Church Preferments, so that when any Churches, that are at the King's Gift, fall vacant, here is a plain Intimation, that they are to be provided to them; and then it is very probable, that all the Laws made against such as go not to their Parish Churches, will be severely turned upon those that will not come to Mass.

XII. His Majesty does in the next Place, in the virtue of his absolute Power, annul a great many Laws, as well those that established the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, as the late Test, enacted by himself in Person, while he represented his Brother: Upon which he gave as strange an Essay to the World of his absolute Justice in the Attainder of the late Earl of Argyle, as he does now of his absolute Power in condemning the Test it self; he also repeals his own Confirmation of the Test, since he came to the Crown, which he offered as the clearest Evidence that he could give of his Resolution to maintain the Protestant Religion, and by which he gained so much upon that Parliament, that he obtained every Thing from them that he desired of them, till he came to try them in the Matters of Religion. This is no extraordinary Evidence to assure his People, that his Promises will be like the Laws of the Medes and Persians, which alter not; nor will the Disgrace of the Commissioner that enacted that Law, lay this Matter wholly on him; for the Letter that he brought, the Speech that he made; and the Instructions which he got, are all too well known to be so soon forgotten. And if Princes will give their Subjects Reason to think, that they forget their Promises, as soon as the Turn is served for which they were made, this will be too prevailing a Temptation on the Subjects to mind the Prince's Promise as little as it seems he himself does, and will force them to conclude; that the Truth of the Prince is not so absolute as it seems he fancies his Power to be.

XIII. Here is not only a repealing of a great many Laws, and established Oaths and Tests, but by the Exercise of the absolute Power a new Oath is imposed, which was never pretended to by the Crown in any former Time; and as the Oath is created by this absolute Power, so it seems the absolute Power must be supported by this Oath, since one Branch of it is an Obligation to maintain his Majesty and his lawful Successors in the Exercise of this their absolute Power and Authority against all deadly, which I suppose is Scors for Mortals. Now to impose so hard a Yoke as this absolute Power on the Subjects, seems no small Stretch; but it is a wonderful Exercise of it; to oblige the Subjects to defend this: It had been more modest, if they had been only bound to bear it, and submit to it. But it is a terrible Thing so far to extinguish all the Remnants of natural Liberty, or of a legal Government, as to oblige the Subjects by Oath, to maintain the Exercise of this, which plainly must destroy themselves: For the short Execution by the Bow-strings of Turky, or by sending Orders to Men to return in their Heads, being an Exercise of this absolute Power, it is a little hard to make Men swear to maintain the King in it: And if that Kingdom has suffered so much by the many Oaths that have been in use among them, as is marked in this Proclamation, I am afraid this new Oath will not much mend the Matter.

XIV. Yet after all, there is some Comfort; his Majesty assures them, he will use no Violence nor Force; nor any invincible Necessity to any Man on the account of his Perswasion: It were too great a Want of Respect to fancy; that a Time may come, in which even this may be remembered, full as well as the Promises that were made to the Parliament after his Majesty came to the Crown. I do not, I confess, apprehend that; for I see here so great a Caution used in the Choice of these Words, that it is plain, very great Severities may very well consist with them: It is clear, that the general Words of Violence and Force are to be determined by these last of invincible Necessity; so that the King does only promise to lay no invincible Necessity on his Subjects; but for all Necessities, that are not invincible, it seems they must expect to bear a large Share of them: Disgraces, Want of Employments, Fines, and Imprisonments, and even Death it self are all vincible Things to a Man of a Firmness of Mind: So that the Violences of Torture, the Furies of Dragoons, and some of the Methods now practised in France, perhaps may be included within this Promise; since these seem almost invincible to human Nature, if it is not fortified with an extraordinary Measure of Grace: But as to all other Things, his Majesty binds himself up from no part of the Exercise of his absolute Power by this Promise.

XV. His Majesty orders this to go immediately to the great Seal, without passing through the other Seals. Now since this is counter-signed by the Secretary, in whose Hands the Signet is, there was no other Step to be made but through the privy Seal; so I must own, I have a great Curiosity of knowing his Character in whole Hands the privy Seal is at present; for it seems his Conscience is not so very supple, as the Chancellor's and the Secretary's are: But it is very likely, if he does not quickly change his Mind, the privy Seal at least will very quickly change its Keeper; and I am sorry to hear, that the Lord Chancellor and the Secretary have not another Brother to fill this Post, that so the Guilt of the Ruin of that Nation may lie on one single Family, and that there may be no others involved in it.

XVI. Upon the whole Matter, many smaller Things being waved, it being extreme unpleasant to find Fault, where one has all possible Dispositions to pay all Respect, we here in England see what we must look for. A Parliament in Scotland was tried; but it proved a little stubborn; and now absolute Power comes to set all right; so when the Cloistering has gone round, so that Noses are counted, we may perhaps see a Parliament here, but if it chances to be untoward, and not to obey without Reserve, then our reverend Judges will copy from Scotland, and will not only tell us of the King's imperial Power, but will discover to us this new Mystery of absolute Power, to which we are all bound to obey without Reserve.

Council's Answer to the King, February 24. 1687. N<sup>o</sup>. CXXXI.

May it please your most sacred Majesty,
 Y<sup>our</sup> Majesty's Commands are exactly obeyed, your royal Proclamation is printed and published, by which your Majesty hath given a further Evidence of your Favour and Goodness to all your Subjects: And we are hopeful, that by your Majesty's extraordinary Acts of Mercy to some, who have been too ready on

on many Occasions to abuse the Clemency of your royal Predecessors, they will be at last convinced what they owe to so gracious a King; and if any shall be still so obstinate as to make any wrong Use of your Majesty's Goodness, we do unanimously assure your Majesty, that we will maintain and assert your royal Prerogatives and Authority, with the Hazard of our Lives and Fortunes; and all of us shall in our several Capacities do our utmost, that your Government may be easy to all whom your Majesty thinks worthy of your Protection.

We are very willing that your Majesty's Subjects who are peaceable and loyal, may be at Ease and Security, notwithstanding of their Profession and private Worship, and do conceive, that such of them as are, or shall be employed by your Majesty in Offices of Trust, civil or military, are sufficiently secured by your Majesty's Authority and Commission for their exercising the same:

We return your Majesty our most humble Thanks, for giving us your Royal Word for maintaining the Church and our Religion, as it is now established by Law, and rest satisfied, believing your Majesty's Promise to be the best and greatest Security we can have. We are,

May it please your Majesty,

Your Majesty's most humble, most faithful,

and most obedient Subjects and Servants,

Right trusty and right welbeloved Cousin and Counsellor, Right trusty and right welbeloved Counsellors, Right trusty and entirely beloved Cousins and Counsellors, Right trusty and right welbeloved Cousins and Counsellors, Right trusty and welbeloved Cousins and Counsellors, Right trusty and welbeloved Cousins and Counsellors, Right trusty and welbeloved Counsellors, and trusty and welbeloved Counsellors, We greet you well. Whereas by Our Letter of the First Day of this Instant, amongst other Things, We did recommend unto you to take Care, that any of the Presbyterians should not be allowed to preach, but such only as should have your Allowance for the same; and that they, at receiving the Indulgence therein mentioned, should take the Oath contained in Our Proclamation, bearing Date the Twelfth Day of February last past: These are therefore to let you know, that thereby we meant such of them as did not formerly take the Test, or any other Oath; but if nevertheless, the Presbyterian Preachers do scruple to take the said Oath, or any other Oath whatsoever, and that you shall find it reasonable or fit to grant them Our Indulgence, so as they desire it upon these Terms: It is now Our Will and Pleasure, and We do hereby authorize and require you to grant them, or any of them, Our said Indulgence, without being obliged to take or swear the Oath in Our said Proclamation mentioned, or any other Oath whatsoever, with Power unto them, or any of them respectively, to enjoy the Benefit of the said Indulgence, (during our Pleasure only) or so long as you shall find that they behave themselves regularly and peaceably, without giving any Cause of Offence to Us, or any in Authority and Trust under Us in Our Government. For doing whereof these Presents shall be to you and them, and all others respectively, who may be therein respectively any way concerned, a sufficient Warrant. And so we bid you heartily farewell.

IT having pleased almighty God, not only to bring Us to the imperial Crown of these Kingdoms through the greatest Difficulties, but to preserve Us by a more than ordinary Providence upon the Throne of Our Royal Ancestors, there is nothing now that We so earnestly desire, as to establish Our Government on such a Foundation, as may make Our Subjects happy, and unite them to Us by Inclination as well as Duty; which We think can be done by no Means so effectually, as by granting to them the free Exercise of their Religion for the Time to come, and add that to the perfect Enjoyment of their Property, which has never been in any Case invaded by Us since Our coming to the Crown: Which being the Two Things Men value most, shall ever be preserved in these Kingdoms, during Our Reign over them, as the truest Methods of their Peace and Our Glory. We cannot but heartily wish, as it will easily be believed, that all the People of Our Dominions were Members of the Catholick Church, yet We humbly thank almighty God, it is, and hath of long Time been Our constant Sense and Opinion, ( which upon divers Occasions We have declared ) that Conscience ought not to be constrained, nor People forced in Matters of mere Religion: It has ever been directly contrary to Our Inclination, as We think it is to the Interest of Government, which it destroys by spoiling Trade, depopulating Countries, and discouraging Strangers; and finally, that it never obtained the End for which it was employed: And in this We are the more confirmed by the Reflections We have made upon the Conduct of the Four last Reigns; for after all the frequent and pressing Endeavours that were used in each of them, to reduce this Kingdom to an exact Conformity in Religion, it is visible the Success has not answered the Design, and that the Difficulty is invincible. We therefore out of Our princely Care and Affection unto all Our loving Subjects, that they may live at Ease and Quiet, and for the Increase of Trade, and Encouragement of Strangers, have thought fit, by virtue of Our Royal Prerogative, to issue forth this Our Declaration of Indulgence, making no doubt of the Concurrence of Our Two Houses of Parliament, when We shall think it convenient for them to meet.

In the first Place We declare, that We will protect and maintain Our Archbishops, Bishops, and Clergy, and all other Our Subjects of the Church of England, in the free Exercise of their Religion, as by Law established, and in the quiet and full Enjoyment of all their Possessions, without any Molestation or Disturbance whatsoever.

We do likewise declare, that it is Our Royal Will and Pleasure, that from henceforth the Execution of all, and all Manner of penal Laws in Matters ecclesiastical, for not coming to Church, or not receiving the Sacrament, or for any other Nonconformity to the Religion established, or for, or by reason of the Exercise of Religion in any Manner whatsoever, be immediately suspended; and the further Execution of the said penal Laws, and of every of them is hereby suspended.

And to the end that by the Liberty hereby granted, the Peace and Security of Our Government in the Practice thereof, may not be endangered, We have thought fit, and do hereby straitly charge and command all Our loving Subjects, that as We do freely give them Leave to meet and serve God after their own Way and Manner, be it in private Houses or Places purposely hired or built for that Use; so that they take special Care, that nothing be preached or taught amongst them, which may any ways tend to alienate the Hearts of Our People from Us or Our Government, and that their Meetings and Assemblies be peaceably, openly, and publickly held, and all Persons freely admitted to them; and that they do signify and make known to some one or more of the next Justices of the Peace, what Place or Places they set apart for those Uses.

And that all Our Subjects may enjoy such their religious Assemblies, with greater Assurance and Protection, We have thought it requisite, and do hereby command, that no Disturbance of any Kind be made or given unto them, under Pain of Our Displeasure, and to be further proceeded against with the uttermost Severity.

And for as much as We are desirous to have the Benefit of the Service of all Our loving Subjects, which by the Law of Nature is inseparably annexed to, and inherent in Our Royal Person, and that none of Our Subjects may for the future be under any Discouragement or Disability, ( who are otherwise well inclined and fit to serve Us ) by reason of some Oaths or Tests, that have been usually administered on such Occasions: We do hereby further declare, that it is Our Royal Will and Pleasure, that the Oaths commonly called, the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance, and also the several Tests and Declarations mentioned in the Acts of Parliament made in the 25 and 30 Years of the Reign of Our late Royal Brother King Charles II. shall not at any Time hereafter be required to be taken, declared, or subscribed by any Person or Persons whatsoever, who is or shall be employed in any Office or Place of Trust, either civil or military, under Us or in Our Government. And We do further declare it to be Our Pleasure and Intention, from Time to Time hereafter, to grant Our Royal Dispensations under Our great Seal to all Our loving Subjects so to be employed, who shall not take the said Oaths, or subscribe or declare the said Tests or Declarations in the above-mentioned Acts, and every of them.

And to the end that all Our loving Subjects may receive and enjoy the full Benefit and Advantage of Our gracious Indulgence hereby intended, and may be acquitted and discharged from all Pains, Penalties, Forfeitures, and Disabilities by them or any of them incurred or forfeited, or which they shall or may at any Time hereafter be liable to, for or by reason of their Nonconformity, or the Exercise of their Religion and from all Suits, Troubles, or Disturbances for the same: We do hereby give Our free and ample Pardon unto all Nonconformists, Recusants, and other Our loving Subjects, for all Crimes and Things by them committed or done contrary to the penal Laws formerly made relating to Religion, and the Profession or Exercise thereof. Hereby declaring, that this Our Royal Pardon and Indemnity shall be as good and effectual to all Intents and Purposes, as if every individual Person had been therein particularly named, or had particular Pardons under Our great Seal, which We do likewise declare shall from Time to Time be granted unto any Person or Persons desiring the same: Willing and requiring Our Judges, Justices, and other Officers, to take Notice of and obey Our Royal Will and Pleasure herein before declared.

Intents

And although the Freedom and Assurance We have hereby given in relation to Religion and Property, might be sufficient to remove from the Minds of Our loving Subjects all Fears and Jealousies in relation to either; yet We have thought fit further to declare, that We will maintain them in all their Properties and Possessions, as well of Church and Abbay-lands, as in any other their Lands and Properties whatsoever.

Given at Our Court at Whitehall, the Fourth Day of April, One thousand six hundred and eighty seven, in the Third Year of Our Reign.

By his Majesty's Special Command.

Proclamation June 28. and July 5. 1687. or the Third Toleration. No. CXXXIV.

JAMES VII. by the Grace of God, King of Scotland, England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To all and sundry Our good Subjects whom these Presents do or may concern, Greeting. Whereas by Our Royal Proclamation of the Date the 12 Day of February 168<sup>6</sup>. We were graciously pleased for the Causes, and on the Terms therein mentioned, to grant Our Royal Toleration to the Professors of the Christian Religion therein named, with, and under certain Restrictions and Limitations; all which are in the said Proclamation more at length expressed: We now taking into Our Royal Consideration the sinister Interpretations, which either have, or may be made of some Restrictions therein mentioned, have thought fit by this Our Royal Proclamation, further to declare, that We will protect Our Archbishops and Bishops, and all Our Subjects of the Protestant Religion, in the free Exercise of their Protestant Religion, as it is by Law established, and in the quiet and full Enjoyment of all their Possessions, without any Molestation or Disturbance whatsoever. And We do likewise by Our sovereign Authority, Prerogative royal, and absolute Power, suspend, stop and disable, all penal and sanguinary Laws, made against any for Non-conformity to the Religion established by Law, in that Our ancient Kingdom, or for exercising their respective Worship, Religions, Rites and Ceremonies; all which Laws are hereby stopt, suspended, and disabled to all Intents and Purposes. And to the end, that by the Liberty thereby granted, the Peace and Security of Our Government in the Practice thereof, may not be endangered, We have thought fit, and do hereby straitly charge and command all Our loving Subjects, that as We do give them Leave to meet and serve God after their own Way and Manner, be it in private Houses, Chapels, or Places purposely hired or built for that Use, so that they take Care that nothing be preached or taught among them, which may any ways tend to alienate the Hearts of Our People from Us or Our Government, and that their Meetings be peaceable, openly and publickly held, and all Persons freely admitted to them, and that they do signify and make known to some one or more of the next Privy Counsellors, Sheriffs, Stewarts, Bailies, Justices of the Peace, or Magistrates of Burghs royal, what Place or Places they set apart for these Uses, with the Names of the Preachers.

And that all Our Subjects may enjoy such their religious Assemblies with greater Assurance and Protection, We have thought fit, and do hereby command, that no Disturbance of any Kind be made or given unto them, under Pain of Our Royal Displeasure, and to be further proceeded against with the utmost Severity; provided always, that their Meetings be in Houses, or Places provided for the Purpose, and not in the open Fields, for which now after this Our Royal Grace and Favour shewn, (which surpasses the Hopes, and equals the very Wishes of the most zealously concerned) there is not the least Shadow of Excuse left; which Meetings in Fields We do hereby strictly prohibit and forbid, against all which We do leave Our Laws and Acts of Parliament in full Force and Vigour, notwithstanding the Premises; and do further command all Our Judges, Magistrates, and Officers of Our Forces, to prosecute such as shall be guilty of the said Field-conventicles or Assemblies, with the utmost Rigour, as they would avoid Our highest Displeasure; for We are confident none will, after these Liberties and Freedoms We have given to all, without Reserve, to serve God in their own Way, presume to meet in these Assemblies, except such as make a Pretence of Religion, to cover their treasonable Designs against Our Royal Person, and the Peace of Our Government. And lastly, to the end all Our good Subjects may have Notice of this Our Royal Will and Pleasure, We do hereby command Our Lyon King at Arms, and his Brethren, Heralds, Macers, Pursevants, and Messengers at Arms, to make timeous Proclamation thereof at the Market-crofs of Edinburgh: And besides the printing and publishing of this Our Royal Proclamation, it is Our express Will and Pleasure, that the same be past under Our great Seal of that Our Kingdom per saltum, without passing any other Seal or Register. In order whereunto, these shall be to the Directors of Our Chancellery and their Deputes, for writing the same, and to Our Chancellor, for causing Our great Seal aforesaid to be appended thereunto, a sufficient Warrant.

Given at Our Court at Windsor, the Twenty eighth Day of June, One thousand six hundred and eighty seven, and of Our Reign the Third Year.

May it please your Majesty,

WE your Majesty's most loyal Subjects, the Ministers of the Presbyterian Perswasion, in your ancient Kingdom of Scotland, from the deep Sense we have of your Majesty's gracious and surprising Favour, in not only putting a Stop to our long sad Sufferings for Nonconformity, but granting us the Liberty of the publick and peaceable Exercise of our ministerial Function, without any Hazard; as we bless the great God, who hath put this in your Royal Heart, do withal find our selves bound in Duty, to offer our most humble and hearty Thanks to your sacred Majesty, the Favour bestowed being to us, and all the People of our Perswasion, valuable above all our earthly Comforts; especially since we have Ground from your Majesty to believe, that our Loyalty is not to be questioned upon the account of our being Presbyterians; who, as we have, amidst all former Temptations, endeavoured, so are firmly resolved still to preserve an entire Loyalty in our Doctrine and Practice, (consonant to our known Principles, which, according to the holy Scriptures, are contained in the Confession of Faith generally owned by Presbyterians, in all your Majesty's Dominions) and, by the Help of God, so to demean our selves, as your Majesty may find Cause rather to enlarge, than to diminish your Favours towards us; thoroughly perswading our selves, from your Majesty's Justice and Goodness, that if we shall at any time be otherwise represented, your Majesty will not give Credit to such Information, until you take due Cognition thereof: And humbly beseeching, that those who promote any disloyal Principles and Practices, (as we do disown them) may be look'd upon as none of ours, whatsoever Name they may assume to themselves.

May it please your most excellent Majesty, graciously to accept this our humble Address, as proceeding from the Plainness and Sincerity of loyal and thankful Hearts, much engaged by this your Royal Favour, to continue our fervent Prayers to the King of Kings, for divine Illumination and Conduct, with all other Blessings, spiritual and temporal, ever to attend your Royal Person and Government; which is the greatest Duty can be rendred to your Majesty, by

and most obedient Subjects:

Subscribed in our own Names, and in the Names of the rest of the Brethren of our Perswasion, at their Desire.

Address of the Inhabitants of Edinburgh and Canongate, 1687. N<sup>o</sup>. CXXXVI.May it please your most sacred Majesty,

WE cannot find suitable Expressions to evidence our most humble and grateful Acknowledgments, for your Majesty's late gracious Declaration, by which we are happily delivered of many sad and grievous Burdens we have long groined under, and (all Restraints, to our great Joy, being taken off) are allowed the free and peaceable publick Exercise of our Religion, a Mercy which is dearer to us than our Lives and Fortunes.

Could we open our Hearts, your Majesty would undoubtedly see what deep Sense and true Zeal for your Service, so surprising and signal a Favour hath imprinted on our Spirits; for which we reckon ourselves highly obliged (throwing our selves at your Majesty's Feet) to return your most excellent Majesty, our most humble, dutiful, and hearty Thanks; and we desire humbly to assure your Majesty, that as the Principles of the Protestant Religion, which, according to our Confession of Faith, we profess; obligeth us, all the Days of our Lives, to that entire Loyalty and Duty to your Majesty's Person and Government, that no Difference of Religion can dissolve; so we hope, and, through God's Assistance, shall still endeavour to demean our selves in our Practice, in such Manner as shall evidence to the World, the Truth and Sincerity of our Loyalty and Gratitude, and make it appear, that there is no Inconsistency betwixt true Loyalty and Presbyterian Principles.

Great Sir, we humbly offer our dutiful and faithful Assurances, that as we have not been hitherto wanting in that great Duty, which our Consciences bind upon us to pray for your Majesty, so this late refreshing and unexpected Favour, will much more engage us in great Sincerity, to continue still to offer up our Desires to the God of Heaven, by whom Kings reign, and Princes decree Justice, to bless your Royal Majesty's Person and Government, and, after an happy and comfortable Reign on Earth, to crown you with an incorruptible Crown of Glory in Heaven, which is most ardently prayed for, by

Most dread Sovereign,

Your Majesty's most humble, most loyal, most dutiful, and most obedient Subjects.

Act, January 17. 1688. for a Thanksgiving upon the Queen's being with Child. N<sup>o</sup>. CXXXVII.

SINCE it hath pleased almighty God, the Fountain of all Life, by whom Kings reign, and Kingdoms are established, to grant unto the King's most excellent Majesty, fresh Hopes of Royal Issue, by his most serene Consort, Our gracious Queen Mary, who (through the great Goodness and Blessing of God) is now with Child; and considering, that the multiplying of the Branches of the Royal Family. (especially issuing from our present sacred Sovereign, James VII. under whose auspicious, wise, and clement Government we enjoy so much Prosperity, Peace and Plenty) is a most desirable Blessing, a native Support, and strengthening of the Crown, and, by just Consequence, a publick Blessing to this Kingdom, tending to the further Security of the Peace and Happiness thereof; his Majesty therefore, (at the humble and earnest Desire, and by the Advice of his Privy Council) hath thought fit upon this important Occasion, to set apart, and appoint a Time, for rendering devout and solemn Thanks to God, for this great Mercy and Blessing, and for offering publick and hearty Prayers to his divine Majesty, to bless and preserve the sacred Person of our dread sovereign Lord the King, to prosper his Reign with honourable and glorious Successes, and to prolong his Life, that he may see his Childrens Children, and his Throne may be as the Sun; as also, that he may bless, preserve, and strengthen his Royal Consort the Queen's Majesty, and make perfect his Work begun for her, may save and defend her from all Dangers and evil Accidents, that what she hath conceived, may be preserved and happily brought forth, to the Joy of our sovereign Lord the King, the further Security of his Crown, and the Happiness and Establishment of this Kingdom.

For this end, his Majesty, with Advice foresaid, doth appoint and ordain, that the foresaid Thanksgiving and Prayers, be devoutly and solemnly performed, in all the Parish-churches within the City and Diocese of Edinburgh, upon the Twenty ninth Day of January instant, and in all the other Churches within this Kingdom, upon the Nineteenth Day of February next; and his Majesty accordingly requires and commands, the most Reverend and right Reverend, the Archbishops and Bishops, to take Care, that in all the Parish-churches within their respective Dioceses, these Prayers and Thanksgivings be accordingly celebrate by all the Ministers and Presbyters under their Jurisdiction, and that they cause Intimation be made hereof, by reading of the same from the Pulpits, in the several Parish-churches, the Lord's Day immediately preceeding the said solemn Days of publick Thanksgiving, respective. And finally, his Majesty charges and commands mands all his loving Subjects, heartily to joyn and concur in these religious and dutiful Performances, as they would shew their Piety and Loyalty, in praying for the Life of the King, the Increase of his Royal Issue, the further Security of the Crown, and the Establishment of Peace and Happiness in this his ancient Kingdom. And that these Presents may be made publick and known, his Majesty ordains his Lyon King at Arms, and his Brethren, Heralds, the Mace-bearers of the Privy Council, and Purse-bearers, to pass to the Market-cross of Edinburgh, and other Places needful, and there, by open Proclamation, and with all accustomed Solemnities on extraordinary Occasions, make Publication of the Premises, that none may pretend Ignorance. Proclamation, May 15. 1688. or the Fourth Indulgence. N<sup>o</sup>. CXXXVIII.

JAMES R.

JAMES VII. by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To all and sundry Our good Subjects, whom these Presents do or may concern, Greeting. Since Our Accession to the Throne of Our Royal Ancestors, Our chiefest Care has been to procure the Security, Peace and Happiness of Our Subjects, by all the ways Our paternal Care of Our People could suggest to Us, especially by removing the Pressures of penal Laws, in Matters of mere Religion, and forbidding all differencing Oaths and Tests, whose unreasonable Weight hung heavy on Us and Our People, precluding both from Our native Freedom and Birth-right; and this We did by Our Royal Declaration, of the Date the 12 of February 1687. In which Declaration We were pleased, for the great and weighty Causes and Considerations therein mentioned, and by virtue of Our sovereign Authority, Prerogative royal, and absolute Power, so plainly acknowledged by several Acts of Parliament, and especially by the second Act of Our first Parliament, to give and grant Our Royal Toleration, to all the Professors of the Christian Religion therein named, and with and under certain Conditions, Restrictions and Limitations, judged by Us for the Time to be necessary; requiring and expecting, that all Our good Subjects would give their Assistance and Concurrence thereunto; on all Occasions, in their respective Capacities; suspending, disabling, and stopping all penal Laws, Acts of Parliament, Customs or Constitutions, made or executed against Dissenters, for Matters of mere Religion. And further, We did ease, annul, and discharge, all Oaths whatsoever, by which any were disabled from holding Places or Offices, or enjoying their hereditary Rights and Privileges, discharging the same to be thence forward given or taken, without Our special Warrant; stopping, disabling, and dispensing, as well with all Laws enjoying the said Oaths and Tests, as with the other penal Laws therein mentioned; and declaring, that it never was Our Principle, nor would We suffer Violence to be offered to any Man's Conscience, or Force to be used against any Man, on the account of his Perswasion; and that We would imploy indifferently, all Our Subjects of all Perswasions, so as none should meet with any Discouragement, on the account of his Religion, but be advanced and esteemed by Us, according to their several Capacities and Qualifications, so long as We should find Charity and Unity maintained: And if any Animosities should arise, that then We would shew the severest Effects of Our Royal Displeasure, against the Beginners or Fomenters thereof, seeing thereby Our Subjects might be deprived of that general Ease and Satisfaction that We did intend to all of them, whose Happiness, Prosperity, Wealth and Safety, were so much in Our Royal Care, that We would leave nothing undone that might procure these Blessings for them. We did likewise declare, that We were resolved to maintain Our Archbishops and Bishops of the Protestant Religion, with all the inferior Clergy, in the full and free Possession of their Rights and Privileges, as they now enjoy them, and all Our Protestant Subjects, in the free Exercise of their Religion; as likewise the Possessors of Church or Abbay Lands, in their full Right of their Possessions, according to Law in that Case already provided; likewise granting Our Indemnity, with such Exceptions as in the foresaid Proclamation is more fully exprest. Thereafter We thought fit to explain and enlarge the same, by Our second Declaration, bearing Date at Windjor the 28 Day of June last bypast. (See Appendix No. 114.)

And in pursuance of Our Royal Intentions therein exprest, We have dissolved all Our Judicatures of Privy Council, Session, Exchequer, Justiciary, and Magistracy of Our Burghs Royal, that by their Acceptations of new Commissions, on the Terms of Our Royal Pleasure, as above exprest, We might convince the World of the Justice of Our Procedure, as the universal Thanks of Our People have manifested the Joy, for so unexpected, unhoped for Blessings, terminating at once their Persecutions, and freeing Our self from the bad Consequences thereof, too manifest in bypast Reigns, to be forgotten in this; and yet there are still some Enemies to Us, and to their own Peace, who labour, to lessen the Happiness Our People enjoy, by Fears and Jealousies, that it will not be lasting; but We will let them and all the World know, that Our Care shall be more indefatigable to prevent and defeat their Malice, than they shall be to contrive or aid the same. And therefore, We have again thought fit to declare Our Royal Intentions, to stand to and maintain Our first Declaration, of the Date the 12 of February 1687. in so far as it is above repeated, and as it is explained and enlarged by Our second, of the Date the 28 of June, according to the true Meaning and Import of the same. And if any shall be so bold as to refuse their due Concurrence with, or Obedience to Us in these Points, they shall find the Weight of Our Royal Displeasure, so as to terrify others from the like Unausfulness to Our Royal Authority, whilst on the other Part, such as dutifully obey and act as become them.

them, shall enjoy the Comfort of Our Royal Protection and Favour. And to the end all Our Subjects may have Notice of this Our Royal Will and Pleasure, We do hereby command Our Lyon King at Arms, and his Brethren, Herald, Macers, Pursevents, and Messengers at Arms, to make timeous Proclamation thereof, at the Market-crofs of Edinburgh. For all which, this shall be to all Persons respectively, who may be therein any way concerned, a sufficient Warrant.

Given under Our Royal Hand and Signet, at Our Court at Whitehall, the Seventh Day of May, 1688. and of Our Reign the Fourth Year.

As likewise, the said Lords, for preventing any Abuses for the future, by pressing of Horses for the Use of his Majesty's Forces, or Artillery, do require and command, that in all time coming, when Horses are needful for his Majesty's Service, in and about Edinburgh, that the commanding Officer give in a Note to his Majesty's Privy Council, of the Number of Horses, and Furniture needful for the Time, and that the said Horses be proportionally furnished, viz. the one Half by the Town of Edinburgh, and the other by the Shire of Mid-lothian; and for that effect, that an Order be direct to the Provost of Edinburgh, and another to the Clerk for the Supply of the Shire, who is hereby ordered to call the Quota conform to the Valuation, and send the several Proportions of the respective Parishes, to one of the Justices of the Peace of the said Parish, who is hereby forthwith ordered to send the said Horses and Furniture to the Place appointed by the Council: And for that effect, the said Justices are hereby empowered and authorized to seize Horses, and fine or imprison the Deficients; and further to prevent Abuses in the furnishing of Horses, the Magistrates of Edinburgh are hereby peremptorily discharged to take, or press any Horses from any Persons, except from their own Inhabitants, and these living in their Town and Suburbs, and under their Jurisdiction. And the said Lords declare, notwithstanding of the Speciality foresaid, that this Act is to be extended as to the whole Shires of the Kingdom, and ordain the same to be put in Execution accordingly, every manner of way, as is above expressed. And to the end these Presents may be made known, ordain the same to be published at the Market-crois of Edinburgh by the Macers of Council, and by Messengers at Arms, at the whole other Market-croises of the head Burghs of the Shires of this Kingdom, that none may pretend Ignorance. Letter from the Scots Bishops to the King, November 3. 1688. N<sup>o</sup>. CXLVII.

May it please your most sacred Majesty,

WE prostrate our selves to pay our most devout Thanks and Adoration to the sovereign Majesty of Heaven and Earth, for preserving your sacred Life and Person, so frequently exposed to the greatest Hazards, and as often delivered, and you miraculously prospered with Glory and Victory, in Defence of the Rights and Honour of your Majesty's august Brother, and of these Kingdoms; and that by his merciful Goodness, the Ragings of the Sea, and Madnefs of unreasonable Men, have been stilled and calmed, and your Majesty, as the Darling of Heaven, peaceably seated on the Thrones of your Royal Ancestors, whose long, illustrious, and unparalleled Line, is the greatest Glory of this your ancient Kingdom.

We pay our most humble Gratitude to your Majesty, for the repeated Assurances of your Royal Protection to our national Church and Religion, as the Laws have established them, which are very suitable to the gracious Countenance, Encouragement and Protection your Majesty was pleased to afford to our Church and Order, whilst we were happy in your Presence amongst us.

We magnify the divine Mercy in blessing your Majesty with a Son, and us with a Prince, whom we pray Heaven may bless and preserve to sway your royal Sceptres after you, and that he may inherit, with your Dominions, the illustrious and heroick Virtues of his august and most serene Parents.

We are amazed to hear of the Danger of an Invasion from Holland, which excites our Prayers for an universal Repentance to all Orders of Men, that God may yet spare his People, preserve your Royal Person, and prevent the Effusion of Christian Blood, and to give such Success to your Majesty's Arms, that all who invade your Majesty's just and undoubted Rights, and disturb or interrupt the Peace of your Realms, may be disappointed, and clothed with Shame, so that on your Royal Head the Crown may still flourish.

As by the Grace of God we shall preserve in our selves a firm and unshaken Loyalty, so we shall be careful and zealous to promote in all your Subjects an intemperate and steadfast Allegiance to your Majesty, as an essential Part of their Religion, and of the Glory of our holy Profession, not doubting but that God in his great Mercy, who hath so often preserved and delivered your Majesty, will still preserve and deliver you, by giving you the Hearts of your Subjects, and the Necks of your Enemies. So pray we, who in all Humility are,

May it please your most sacred Majesty,

Your Majesty's most humble, most faithful,

and most obedient Subjects and Servants.

JAMES R.

Right trusty and right welbeloved Counsellors, and right trusty and welbeloved, We Greet you well. We have received your most dutiful Letter, of the Third Day of November, in which We are glad to see, that you are far from being of the Number of those spiritual Lords, whom the Prince of Orange pretends tends to have been invited by ; as We have likewise had repeated Assurances from all the Bishops of England, of their Innocency in that, and Duty to Us : We have now thought fit by this to tell you, how sensible We are of your Zeal for Our Service, and for the dutiful Expressions of your Loyalty to Us, in a Time when all Arts are used to seduce Our Subjects from their Duty to Us. We do likewise take Notice of your Diligence in your Duty, by your inculcating to those under your Charge, these Principles which have always been owned, taught and published by that Protestant, loyal Church you are truly Members of : We do assure you of Our royal Protection to you, your Religion, Church and Clergy, and that We will be careful of your Concerns, whenever there shall be a suitable Occasion offered to Us ; you, and every one of you, being most perfectly in Our royal Protection and Favour. And so We bid you heartily Farewel.

Given at Our Court at Whitehall, the Fifteenth Day of November, 1688. and of Our Reign the Fourth Year.

WHereas we have seen a Proclamation issued out in Name of his most sacred Majesty, declaring, that the Prince of Orange and his Adherents have designed to invade his Majesty's Kingdoms ; and that now his Majesty hath signified by his Royal Letter, of the Date, at Whitehall the Fifth Day of November instant, that they are landing in England, and in order thereto, have contrived and framed several treasonable Papers and Declarations, hoping thereby to seduce and corrupt his Majesty's Subjects, and that several Persons are employed to disperse the same : And since such Methods may be taken to corrupt his Majesty's Subjects, in this his ancient Kingdom ; therefore we, the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, in his Royal Name, and by his Authority, have thought it necessary to admonish all his Majesty's Subjects within this Kingdom, of what Degree or Quality soever, that they do not publish, disperse, repeat, or hand about the said treasonable Papers or Declarations, or any of them ; or any other Paper or Papers of such like Nature, and particularly a Declaration in the Prince of Orange's Name, and another in the Name of the States General, nor presume to read, receive, conceal, or keep the said treasonable Papers or Declarations, or any of them, or any other Paper or Papers to that Purport, or to disperse any false News, tending to the amusing his Majesty's Subjects, or to the Disturbance of the Peace of the Kingdom, without discovering and revealing the same, as speedily as may be, to some of the Privy Council, or to some other Judges, Justices of the Peace, or Magistrates, upon Peril of being prosecuted according to the utmost Severity of Law. Proclamation, Dec. 24. 1688. calling forth the Heritors. N<sup>o</sup>. CLI.

THe Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, considering the great Fears and Jealousies of the Kingdom, from the Apprehensions his Majesty's Lieges generally have, of the Papists being in Arms in Galloway and other Places, and the Suspicions there may be of the Irishes, and other Papists from England and Ireland, in this dangerous Conjunction, their joyning with them, to the manifest Hazard of the Protestant Religion, and the endangering the Peace and Quiet of this his Majesty's ancient Kingdom; have therefore thought fit, that all his Majesty's Protestant Subjects may put themselves in their best Posture of Defence, for Security of the Protestant Religion, and securing their own Lives, Liberties, and Properties: In pursuance of which, the said Lords do hereby require and command the whole Heritors within this Kingdom, (armed and provided according to their Conditions and Qualities) to repair to the head Burghs of their respective Shires and Stewartries, or such convenient Places, as the respective Commanders aftermentioned shall appoint, and there to be rendezvoused under the Command of the Persons following, viz. The Shire of Nithsdale and Stewartry of Anandale, under the Command of the Duke of Queensberry, or such as he shall appoint; the Shire of Air, comprehending all its Jurisdictions, under the Earl of Cassils; the upper Ward of Clidsdale, under the Marquis of Douglas, or such as he shall appoint; the nether Ward, under the Duke of Hamilton, and in his Absence, the Lord Carmichael; the Shire of Galloway, under the Laird of Logan; the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright, under the Viscount of Kenmuir; the Shire of Renfrew, under the Command of Sir Archibald Stuart of Blackhall, Baronet; the Shire of Dumbarton, under the Command of the Laird of Ardincaple; the Shire of Teviotdale, under the Earl of Lothian; the Shire of Berwick, under Sir Archibald Cockburn of Langtoun, Baronet; the Shires of Forest and Peebles, under the Laird of Drumelzier; the Shire of East Lothian, under the Command of Charles Master of Yester; the Shire of Edinburgh, under the Earl of Lawderdale; the Shire of Linlithgow, under the Earl of Linlithgow, Lord Justice-general; the Shires of Stirling and Clackmannan, under the Earl of Mar; the Shire of Kinross and Western Division of Fife, under John Bruce Fiar of Kinross; the Eastern Division of Fife, under Sir Charles Halket of Pitfirren; the Two Divisions of the Shire of Perth, under such Commanders as they shall think fit to choose; the Shire of Forfar, under the Earl of Southesk; the Shire of Kincardin, under the Lord Keith; Marshall's Part of Aberdeen, under the Master of Forbes, or such as he shall appoint; the rest of Aberdeen Shire, under the Master of Forbes, or such as he shall appoint; the Shire of Bamff, under the Earl of Finlater; all betwixt Spey and Ness, under the Lord Duffus; the Shire of Ross, under Sir Rory Mackenzie of Findon; the Shire of Sutherland, under the Lord Srathnaver, and in his Absence, by Sir Robert Gordon of Gordonstoun; the Shire of Cathness under the Lord Glenorchy; the Shire of Bute, under the Sheriff of Bute. As likewise hereby authorize and empower the Magistrates of the whole Royal Burrows within this Kingdom, to rendezvouze the whole fencible Persons, Inhabitants within the same, for the great and laudable Ends abovementioned. Likeas, the said Lords do hereby advertise and require the whole Militia of Foot in this Kingdom, to be in Readiness to be rendezvouzed, when ever his Majesty's Privy Council shall have Occasion for their Service, and that at the respective Places of their Rendezvouz, and under their respective Commanders; and ordain the Heritors abovementioned, to be rendezvouzed at the Places of Rendezvouz, within their respective Shires, at the Diets following, viz. all the Shires below the River of Tay, upon Tuesday the first Day of January next; the Shires betwixt the River of Tay and Spey, upon Tuesday thereafter, the Eighth Day of the said Month; and the whole other Shires benorth Spey, upon Tuesday the Fifteenth Day of the said Month of January. First Draught of an Address to the Prince of Orange. N<sup>o</sup>. CLII.

To his Royal Highness the Prince of Orange, the Representation of the Grievances of many Thousands in the Church and Kingdom of Scotland, caused from a prevailing Faction, making Defection from the laudable Work of Reformation, at our first coming out of Popery, after the Year 1560. and renewed after Thirty Years Defection, in the Year 1683. until 1660. and first by the Acts of the Parliaments and Privy Council, and secondly by the Practice founded thereupon, and beyond them, whereby these evil Counsellors have given to the King, an absolute and arbitrary Power, engaging themselves, and what in them lies, with the whole Nation, to obey him without a Reserve, which is blasphemous, and only proper to the sovereign Majesty of GOD; together with a Call and humble Petition to his Highness, from the People of Scotland, of all Sorts, especially of the Presbyterians there.

I. THe Acts of Parliament and Council, first they took a Way that none should be Members of Parliament, Privy Council, Justiciary Courts, Exchequer, and of any Place of Trust in Church or State, but such as should be for, and comply with their Designs; and that by Acts of Parliament and Council, imposing Oaths upon such, and keeping up warlike Forces to compel all who should any ways oppose their Proceedings, or disobey them in any thing, whereby all Judicatories and Places of Trust were corrupted, and appointing the Lord Chancellor, now and always in Time coming, to preside in Parliament and all publick Judicatories.

1st. By the Act anent the Prerogative of King Charles II. Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Act 1. which all Members of Parliament, at their downsitting, were to swear, and to be taken by all in civil Places of Trust, before their Admission thereunto.

2<sup>dly</sup>. By taking the Oath of Supremacy, (falsly called the Oath of Allegiance) Act 11. ejusdem, and renewed in Parliament second, Sess. 1. Act 1. and which all the Subjects were to take when required, Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Act 17. of King James VII.

3<sup>dly</sup>. None are to have Office in any University or College, but such as own Prelatical Government, and take the Oath of Supremacy, Sess. 2. Act 4. Parl. 1. King Charles II.

4<sup>thly</sup>. By taking the Declaration, wherein all Subjects are discharged to enter into Leagues and Covenants, or to take up Arms against the King, or any commissioned by him, upon any Pretence whatsoever, and annulling all done before, in carrying on the Work of Reformation, (called therein the late Troubles) condemning the national Covenant of Scotland, (made at our first Reformation from Popery, and renewed in the Year 1638.) as explained in the said Year, which, by the general Assembly, condemned the Hierarchy of Bishops, and the solemn League and Covenant of the Three Kingdoms, Act 5. ejusdem, the owning of these Covenants as lawful, shall infer the Crime and Pains of Treason, Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Act 5. of K. James VII. the Duke of Queensberry being Commissioner; to which is added, That he who refuses to take the said Declaration, in Burghs, shall, besides what is in the foresaid Acts, lose the Privileges of Merchandizing, Trading, and others belonging unto a Burghers, Parl. 1. Sess. 3. Act 2. K. Charles II.

5<sup>thly</sup>. By taking the Oath of the Test, (far differing from the English Test) wherein is the Oath of Supremacy, the Abjuration of the Covenants, and a swearing to defend, assist, and maintain his Majesty's Jurisdiction: This must be understood of what the Parliament has given him, securing the Supremacy to its Height, Parl. 3. Sess. 1. Act 6. of King Charles II. also all Heritors and Liferenters, Wadsetters, Masters of Ships, all Burghesses and Inhabitants of Burghs, are to take it, Parl. 1. Act 13. of K. James VII. but no Papist to take it.

II. Screwing up the Supremacy to a strange Height, as 1st. by the Oaths of the Prerogative, Supremacy, the Declaration and Test above exprest.

2<sup>dly</sup>. By discharging all Church-judicatories to exercise any Power, which doth not acknowledge a Dependence upon, and Subordination to the sovereign Power of the King, as Supreme; and asserting the ordering and Disposal of the external Government and Policy of the Church, properly to belong to his Majesty, as an inherent Right of the Crown, by virtue of his Royal Prerogative, and Supremacy in Causes ecclesiastical, Parl. 1. Sess. 2. Act 1. K. Charles II. Thus the King is made the Head and King of the Church, which is only proper to Christ, and annuls all Proceedings to the contrary, altho' made by K. James VI. and Charles I. and their Parliaments.

3<sup>dly</sup>. Act 4. ejusdem, it is asserted, that the Nomination of Members of Church-judicatories, and particularly of a national Synod, belongs to his Majesty, as an inherent Right of the Crown, by virtue of his Prerogative and supreme Authority in Causes ecclesiastical; and accordingly his Majesty, in the said Act, names them; and to debate and conclude upon such Matters, as his Majesty shall cause to be delivered to the Archbishop of St. Andrews, President of the said national Synod, that no such Assembly is to be kept without his Majesty or his Commissioner's Presence, and that only to be a valid Act, and binding Canon, which is agreed upon by the President, and major Part of the Assembly, and approved and confirmed by his Majesty or his Commissioner: A strange Act; such a Power was never given by any general Council to the Pope, nor claimed by him.

4thly. An Act, asserting all Government does originally reside in his Majesty, and lawful Heirs and Successors, and declares that his Majesty may, by himself or any commissioned by him, take Cognizances of, and make Decision in any Cause or Causes he pleases, Parl. 3. Sess. 1. Act 18. K. Charles II. This is strange; for hereby all civil or Kirk-judicatories may be cut off, as needless.

5thly. They establish the King's absolute Power and Authority, and oblige themselves to obey the King, without Reserve entirely, Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Act 2. James VII.

III. The many Acts against the Meetings of the nonconform Ministers, Preachers and Hearers, under the Penalties of exorbitant Fines, and other greater Punishments, even Death it self, Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Act 8. of K. James VII. and to the exhauling of their Estates, of which some had very great Estates; and that neither they meet in private Houses nor in the Fields, (which yet were but rare) because they could not with Safety, and without being apprehended, meet in Houses, and that merely for Nonconformity, Parl. 1. Sess. 3. Act 1. K. Charles II. Acts 5 & 7. Sess. 2. Parl. 2. Act 4. Parl. 3. Sess. 1. Act 16 ejusdem, Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Act 24. of K. James VII.

2dly. Particularly, besides what is last said anent new conform Ministers; first, their imprisoning of about Twelve Ministers, before ever the first Parliament sat down, for meeting together in Edinburgh, and drawing a necessary and laudable Supplication to the late King's Majesty, after he came last home to England, in 1660. for which, and other Things relating to the Reformation, as they both suspected and alleged, the Committee of Estates gave them a Libel, as being guilty of Treason, and putting them from their Office and Benefice, and did execute one of them, as in the next follows.

2dly. Their executing the Marquis of Argyle, the Lord of Waristoun, the then Register, for Things whereof many of themselves were guilty; but they said, they had a Remission; and Mr. James Guthrie an eminent and faithful Minister of the Gospel, forfeiting all the Three, and mainly for Matters relating to the Reformation, and being Friends thereto, Three famous Martyrs; and did set up their Heads in eminent Places; God in his Providence so ordering it, that, at the very first, a Nobleman, a Gentleman, and a Minister should seal the Work of Reformation with their Blood. This was done in the Year 1661.

3dly. There being outed to the Number of about 300. both from Office and Benefice, by an Act of the Privy Council, in the Year 1661. for Nonconformity; there being in all Scotland but between Nine and Ten hundred Ministers and Parish-churches, and commanding them to remove their Residence Twenty Miles from their Parish-churches, Six Miles from Cathedral Churches, and Three Miles from all Royal Burgs; it was impossible to put all these Clauses in Execution as to all of them: And all this according to Act 1. Sess. 3. Parl. 1. King Charles II.

4thly. If they preach any, to be punished as seditious Persons, Act 1. ejusdem; but withal, securing the Persons of all conformist Preachers in a strange Way, under uncouth Penalties upon the Parishioners, tho' never so innocent, if any Hurt came to them from any whatsoever, Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Act. 5. K. Charles II.

5thly. That such as preach in Houses or in the Fields, shall be punished with Death, Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Act 8. K. James VII. This was executed upon some of them.

6thly. Denuding them these 27 Years past, of their Maintenance wherewith they maintained themselves; Wives, Children, and Servants, giving and allowing them not a Penny therefor, nay, not out of vacant Stipends; appointing the same to be given to suffering conform Ministers, for their Loyalty, (as they call it, and to their Wives and Bairns after their Death) and this to the impoverishing of many godly Nonconformists, and bringing them into great Straits, Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Act 52. K. Charles II.

7thly. Against ordaining of Ministers, making these Ordinations null, and such so ordained to be no Ministers, contrary to the Judgment of all orthodox Protestants, Parl. 2. Sess. 3. Act 9. Charles II.

9thly. Against their Baptizing, and who shall baptize with them, to pay also huge Fines, Parl. 2. Sess. 2. Act 6. Sess. 3. Act 11. Charles II.

10thly. The banishing of many of them out of his Majesty's Dominions, and not to return under the Pain of Death, without the Licence of Authority, many of them dying abroad, and that for refusing to sign the Oath of Supremacy; yea, several of them for offering to take the said Oath, with an Explication thereof, holding forth its orthodox Sense, were sentenced with Banishment.

11thly. Their often and long Imprisonments in most unwholsom Places and Prisons, to the putting of them to Expences for maintaining themselves and Family, Payment of Jaylor-fees, paying Money to Clerks for their Petitions, and oft-times in vain, and being necessitate to bribe, especially the King's Advocate, and paying much to the Clerks for the Extracts of their Liberties, when they got it, (these Expences were common to them with others) and severals of them dying in their Prisons; also severals of them were put in the Irons, and some of them tortured, and some of them, since the Liberty was granted, for but modestly Preaching against the repealing of the penal Statutes, were imprisoned.

IV. The rescinding and annulling all the Parliaments that were for renewing the Work of Reformation, and so all their Acts, especially relating thereunto, since the Year 1637. as the Parliaments 1640, 1641, 1644, 1645, 1646, 1647 & 1649. albeit the King himself was present in that of 1641. and ratified the same, and what was then done; and in 1640. Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Act 15. K. Charles II.

V. Their rescinding, casting and annulling of Presbyterian Government from its very Foundation, and restoring and re-establishing prelatical Government, Parl. 1. Sess. 2. Act 1. K. Charles II.

VI. Their appointing an anniversary thanksgiving Day for the King's Birth-day and Restauration, in the Narrative whereof they rail, near unto Blasphemy, against all the Ways which were used for the Work of Reformation, from 1637 to 1660. they appointed it to be kept as an holy Day for ever, which is proper to God only, Par. 1. Sess. 1. Act 17. of K. Charles II.

VII. Their appointing huge Sums of Money to be lifted and paid by this poor oppressed Kingdom, as 1mo. For the King, besides his ordinary Revenues, 1st. 40000 Pounds Sterling yearly during his Lifetime is continued, Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Act 13. Charles II.

3dly. Of 864000 Pounds, Parl. 2. Sess. 3. Act 4. ejusdem, and by annexing the Assize to the Crown, Parl. 1. Sess. 2. Act 2. James VII.

4thly. Of 216000 Pounds yearly, over and besides the Five Months Cess, appointed by the Third Act of Parliament, 1681. and a Continuation of Four Months Cess termly, from Woutfunday 1685. during all the Terms of his Majesty's Lifetime, Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Act 12. K. James VII.

5thly. Annexing all the Offices, Privileges and Superiorities belonging to the Earl of Argyle to the Crown; as likewise the Lands of the Earl of Tarnas, Lord Melvil, and others, Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Act 40. ejusdem.

6thly. Annexing to the Crown all the Lands and Baronies of all these who were upon the late Plot (as they call it, but indeed meeting and consulting what they were called to do for Defence of the Protestant Religion) for which Jerviswood was executed, and others, and all this notwithstanding the King got never one Penny of it, it being bestowed to keep up a military Force here, for putting the Laws and Acts in Execution, and given to indigent Lords, and others who are our Patriots and Governors, for keeping the whole Land under Slavery and Bondage. And for the Lords of Session, First, 12000 Pounds Sterling for making up a Stock to them, and to be paid by the Shires and Burghs, Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Act 50. Charles II. Secondly. For them, 10000 Pounds Scots yearly, besides 10000 Pounds granted by his present Majesty's Royal Grandfather, or what hath been formerly granted to them, or otherwise appertained to them, Parl. 1. Sess. 2. Act 7. of K. Charles II.

VIII. Approving the Engagement against England of 1648. (which was declared unlawful both by Church and State) annulling the Parliaments and Committees kept thereafter, and condemning the Rising in Arms of the West, and all Acts and Deeds flowing from all those (which yet were approved by the Parliament, 1649.) Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Act 9. K. Charles II.

IX. An Offer to the King of 20000 Footmen, and 2000 Horsemen, sufficiently armed with Forty Days Provision, to march, when called, to any Part of his Majesty's Dominions, Parl. 1. Sess. 3. Act 25. Charles II.

X. That all, of whatsoever Sex, Degree or Quality, depone upon Oath against Delinquents, as they call them, when called thereto, especially anent Conventicles, and if they refuse, to be fined, imprisoned, or banished to the Indies, Parl. 2. Sess. 2. Act 2. Charles II. and who shall refuse to be thus Witnesses in the Cases of Treason (in their Account) Field or House-conventicles, they shall be liable to be punished as guilty of these Crimes respectively, Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Act 4. K. James VII. This is against the moral Law of God, which commands Love to our Neighbour, and also against it and the Light of Nature, when hereby we are to depone against our selves. Yea, if any should refuse upon Oath to depone against themselves, it was told them, in their Judicatories, they should be holden guilty of what was enquired at them.

XI. That the Master is to be answerable for all in his Family, his Tenants and Cottars, with Power to him to punish them for keeping Conventicles (as they called them) or resetting of nonconform Ministers, or intercommuned Persons, by putting them from their Lands notwithstanding of their Tacks, Parl. 3. Sess. 1. Act 4. Charles II. also for this against Tenants under huge Penalties, Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Act 24. James VII. 2dly. Husbands are to be liable for their Wives Fines, Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Act 6. James VII.

XII. Statuting that the concealing, and not revealing of Supplies, given to, or demanded for Traitors (as they accounted them) is Treason, Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Act 7. James VII.

XIII. They indemnify all his Majesty's Officers of State, Members of the secret Committee, Lords of Privy Council, and all his Majesty's Judges, and the Officers of the Army, against all Pursuits that can be raised against them for acting in his Majesty's Service, as likewise for their Omissions, Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Act 31. James VII. they extended this thus, if they should wound or kill any fleeing from their Barbarity in pursuing them, and to all their Acts made by them.

XIV. The Parliaments, from Time to Time, committed to the Privy Council to act, and do in order to their Acts and what might conduce to the upholding of this their Tyranny and Oppression, yet, their whole Power, which they did execute to the very Height, beyond the Acts of Parliament, having no Law of their own herefor.

1. Their imprisoning of about Twelve Ministers for meeting together in Edinburgh, and drawing a necessary and laudable Supplication to the late King Charles, after he came last home to England, for which and other Things relating to the Reformation, as they but suspected and alledged, they gave each of them one and the same long Libel, as being guilty of Treason, and did put them all from their Office and Benefice, of whom one of them was executed, as afterward we shall hear. This was done by a Committee of Estates, before any Parliament was held after the King's Restauration.
2. Their tolerating of Popery and Popish Meetings, ever since 1660. but no Quarter was given to Presbyterians and their Meetings.
3. Their marching with a great Host to the West, anno 1678. against a most innocent People, who neither was speaking nor doing any Thing against them, nor did any Thing in the least by resisting or defending themselves, by which, in quartering, robbing and plundering, they almost consumed these Shires as to their Goods. This can hardly be paralleled.
4. Their putting all the Gentry and Heritors to come forth with their Followers and Arms, when they thought they were diffculted by any Resistance of the grieved and nonconformed Subjects, or had Suspicions of the same, as at the going West of the Host abovementioned, at Pentland and Bethwel, and at Argyle's coming over from Holland, which put them to great Expence, and who came not out were greatly fined.
5. Their putting all the Subjects to it to riek out this last Militia, with Arms and Forty Days Provision, intended against the Prince of Orange, until they saw their Hopes broken.

6. Many

6. Many were forced to leave the Country to evade their Persecution, where some of them spent much, and some of them all the little Stock they had.

7. Their excessive and exorbitant Fines for mere Nonconformity. 2dly. Their forfeiting Men for Life and Fortune for hinting to help the oppressed, as Kerstand and Caldwel, not giving to their relict Ladies so much as a Penny of their Joynture, above these Twenty Years past, and others. 3dly. Forfeiting Men for mere Converse with these that were intercommuned, or had been in Arms for their own Defence, so that they should not be seen with their nearest Relations, yea, the Husband behaved not to converse with his Wife or Children, nor they with him, and were to be executed unless they got out a Remission for their Life, and many of these were intercommuned for mere Nonconformity; and thus they extolled their cruel civil Laws above the Law of God, and all this albeit many of themselves were guilty hereof. 4thly. Forfeiting the Laird of Cesnock his great Estate, notwithstanding he was absolved by the criminal Court, and gave the same to the Earl of Melford. 5thly. Forfeiting and executing the late Earl of Argyle by a Sentence of the Criminal Court, and that for a most innocent and candid Explication of the Test, upon which he offered to subscribe it; for no further Process was led against him, when he came into his Country in Arms, after his Escape. 6thly. Their executing of many of these who rose in Arms for their own Defence, being before pillaged and barbarously used by Sir James Turner, with his blasphemous ruffian Soldiers, there being no other Mean for Remedy left them, in regard all the Subjects were discharged to supplicate or petition for any Redress of the Wrongs done unto them (and this tho' they expressed, at their Death in their Speeches, much Love, Loyalty and Respect to the King) which is against that known Maxim, cuiuslibet licet supplicare & protestari. The like was done to very many of those who rose at Bothwell upon the same account. Many of both these had their Heads, and other Pieces of their Body fixt, and set up in publick Places. Also many of them were driven like Sheep into a Church-yard at Edinburgh, affording them neither Meat nor Clothing. Many of them were drowned by their Means in a Ship, pretending to send them to America, who might easily have been saved, the Ship-master having gone ashore, having left the Doors upon the Deck locked upon them, excepting a few who were upon the Deck and were saved; and yet nothing was done against the Ship-master therefore. 7thly. Their torturing barbarously, by breaking their Legs and Bones, calling them in the Boot; others had their Thumbs crushed by an uncouth and unusual Engine; others had their Ears cut, and afterwards sent to America to be sold for Slaves. Now many of these were so dealt with for mere Nonconformity and not deposing upon Oath against themselves. Others also, long before these, were burnt in the Cheek for resisting a Curate coming in upon them, and thereafter were banished; this Curate was excommunicated before in the Time of Presbyterian Government. 8thly. They executed several simple Women for mere Words spoken out of their Zeal, but wanting Knowledge.

It is impossible to relate all their Butcheries and cruel Persecutions, especially the evil Counsellors, viz. the Privy Council, both by their Acts, Practices, and Commands, the bloody Lords of the Justiciary and criminal Court, the King's Advocate, yet on Life, Sir George Mackenzie, pleading for these Executions, the cruel Lord Bishops with their Curates, instigating to all these Things, beside their acting in them, the profane and atheistical Officers, and common Soldiers and Dragoons. Now, how can any of these be trusted again? who kept not Faith to God, they will not keep it to Men; also, according to that Maxim, Falsæ sunt hominibus, non veræ Deo, they will not keep it to Men; also, according to that Maxim, Falsæ sunt hominibus, non veræ Deo, never true to Man.

By all these it is clear, that the Government, both of Church and State, is overturned, the Work of Reformation defaced, and almost ruined, that this poor Land is almost destroyed and eaten up; it is a Wonder it is not so. That People of all Ranks, great and small, have been oppressed in their Consciences, Bodies and Estates, manifold and great Perjuries committed through the imposing of Oaths, and contrary Oaths against their Light, dreadful Breaches of Covenants, and despising of the Oath of God; for which, and the manifold horrid Profanities of all Sorts through the whole Land, and tolerated both by the prelatical Church and backsliding State, and horrid Abominations and Idolatry protected, it is to be feared the Lord may have a Controversy and Quarrel against us, which may be gathered, especially from Ezek. Chap. 17. there Zedekiah having made a Covenant with the King of Babylon, an heathen King, in a Matter of civil Homage, and to get a Crown, and so in a manner forced to it, which God owns for his Covenant and Oath, because Zedekiah swore by God, 2 Chron. Chap. 36. ver. 13. and yet for the Breach thereof he was dreadfully threatened, and all Judah was led captive by the Chaldeans.

The Petition follows.

And now we humbly and earnestly petition and desire his Royal Highness the Prince of Orange, to come or send some commissioned by him, and to bring or send some competent Number of Forces, with whom many in this Land are ready to joyn, and thereby to bring us to our first Constitution, particularly and especially to procure,

1st. That a free Parliament or Convention of Estates being called, without imposing of Oaths either upon the Electors or elected Members, which these, of whom we now complain, required before, and at their sitting down; and that no Bishop or evil Counsellor be called to sit to be our Judges, and until the same be had, or if it cannot be had soon, that the Bishops be presently put from their Office as such, or to have any Places of Trust, that a new Council, Justiciary Court, and other well affected Officers be settled and erected.

2dly. That the Oaths and Bonds imposed may be helped or done away, particularly and especially, that the Oaths of the Prerogative and Supremacy may be corrected, and the Oaths of the Declaration abjuring our Covenants and the Test, may be abrogated.

3dly. That when the Parliament sits down, the Office of Bishops above Pastors, with all that pertain thereunto, be assailed, a Yoke which neither we nor our Fathers were able to bear since the first Reformation, the same having no Warrant from God's Word, being contrary to our solemn Covenants and Vows, and which our Predecessors at the bringing in of the first Bishops, in their Remonstrances, Supplications, and Protestations, did hold forth to be the Egg of which Antichrist and the Man of Sin was clected at first, and by by which, as a Ladder and Steps, he mounted up to the Popedom, withal denouncing a Curse upon these who should build this Jericho again, as the Book of Conformity holds forth; by which Cursing, a judicial Stroke from the Lord hath seized upon them ever since; for albeit there may be some good Men in that Office elsewhere, who have not attained such a Height of Reformation herein, and come under such Engagements to God as we against them, yet ours may be reckoned amongst the worst of Men; yea, the Protestants in Scotland could never bear with such a Government.

4thly. That Presbyterian Government be restored and re-established, as it was at the Beginning of our Reformation from Popery, and renewed in the Year 1638. continuing until 1660. and that there be no Church-judicatories hereafter, but of Presbyterian Ministers and ruling Elders, by General Assemblies, provincial Synods, Classes or Presbyteries, and Church-sessions.

5thly. That Presbyterian Ministers which are alive, may return to their former Charge, and enjoy the Benefices thereof, and where other Presbyterian Ministers have Meeting-houses at present, they may have the publick Churches with the Maintenance thereof; the present conform Incumbents having come in with all the rest of them, at least generally without the Election of the People, and so are Intruders, and that the rest of these Conformists be referred to the Church-judicatories, it being remembred and considered, (as is already said) that about Three hundred of Presbyterian Ministers were removed from their Charges and Benefices in one Day, anno 1661. and such as were among the lowest and worst of the People, generally as being insufficient or scandalous Men, were put in their Room, wherewith also the whole Church was and is pestered.

6thly. That laick Patronages be discharged, as was done in the Parliament 1649. and the People restored to their Right and Privilege of Election, according to the Warrant of God's Word.

7thly. That what Acts were made debarring any to supplicate and petition Authority, may be cancelled, and a Liberty granted therefor.

8thly. That the Royal Burghs, being restored to their Privileges, may be put to choose Magistrates well affected to this good Cause.

9thly. That these of the West Country may have their Arms restored to them, the same being taken from them, because they are generally well affected.

10thly. That as much as can be, all Losses may be repaired, the Fines repaid by such as appointed, required and received them, and all Forfeitures, found unjustly to be inflicted, be taken off, and their Lands be restored to the right Owners, their Relicks and Heirs, and who have possessed them hitherto, may at least repay to the Relicks of the deceast their bygone Joyntures, which were and are due to them; oured Ministers, their Relicks or Heirs, may have some Recompence for their bygone Stipends. It may be here remembred, that in the Parliament which began anno 1661. great Fines were imposed and exacted of many of all Ranks in the Land, whom they but suspected to have been for the Reformation before; and if the like be done now against known guilty Persons, they cannot justly complain.

11thly. That there be a competent military Force of our own, established of Persons well affected to the re-established good Government of Church and State, as standing Forces before the Prince his Forces be removed, and the same to be paid as formerly these Years past; and that a Militia be settled with new and well affected Officers; and that these Forces which have been employed against us, and are still in Arms, be disarmed and disbanded.

12thly. That there may be a Commission for Plantation of Kirks appointed.

These Things being granted, will the more oblige us to pray to God for your Royal Highness, and good Success in all your glorious Undertakings, who are,

Your Royal Highness's most humble, and most obliged Servants.

Address from the Meeting of Presbyterian Ministers to the Prince of Orange. No. CLIII.

May it please your Highness,

WE cannot but magnify and bless the Lord, who, in his sovereign Goodness and Mercy, hath raised up your Highness as a worthy Successor of your illustrious Ancestors, whom God eminently honoured zealously to appear for the reformed Religion, and Relief of the Professors thereof in the Netherlands, in their greatest Extremities through Romish Cruelty and Persecution; and now when the true Religion, the Ministers and Professors thereof were in no less Danger, from their malicious and powerful Enemies, hath graciously inclined your Highness to espouse the Interest of his Churches in these Kingdoms, with so much Hazard and Expence, and hath hitherto blessed your pious and heroick Undertaking with admirable Success, and so little Effusion of Blood. This is the Doing of the Lord, who is wonderful in Counsel, and excellent in working; and it cannot but be marvellous in our Eyes, and will be on Record for Generations to come. And, great Sir, we hold our selves obliged, with all possible Thankfulness, to acknowledge your Highness the Lord's chosen; called, and singularly qualified Servant for this his Work.

Our Hearts were not a little revived and refreshed by your Highness's gracious Declaration in reference to Scotland, which was to us as Rain on the mown Grass, perceiving therein your Knowledge and Repentment of our deplorable Condition, with so much Christian Compassion, and magnanimous Resolution to relieve and rescue us from these our insupportable Sufferings, which also encouraged us to offer this our humble humble Address, so soon as we could with Safety meet upon it : In which we will not enumerate the Particulars of the fore Trials of this Church, referring that to those entrusted herewith, to be presented to your Highness, when called for. Only, Sir, as your Highness hath wisely noticed, one great Occasion of all the Miseries under which this Country hath for a long Time groined, to have been the driving of some Hundreds of Ministers out of their Churches, without either Accusation or Citation, and the filling of many of their Places with ignorant and scandalous Persons ; so it is well known, the true Cause of this was the overturning of the Presbyterial Government, which was generally received as of divine Right, and established by the national Assemblies of this Church, and Sanction of many civil Laws ; and instead thereof the erecting of Prelacy, which being attended with a numerous Train of severe Laws, rigorously executed both on Ministers and People of all Degrees, who found themselves bound up from Compliance therewith, both by Light and Conviction from the Word of God, and the Conscience of many solemn Engagements, became the Source of all the Evils of Sin and Suffering which followed : And to complete our Calamities, when counted and treated as Sheep for the Slaughter, we might not complain or petition without rendring our selves highly criminal.

And, Sir, being in this grievous Bondage, it will, we doubt not, plead for a favourable Construction of our accepting the little Respite allowed us in June 1687. seeing, as we ought not to do or comply with what is evil, that Good may come of it ; so neither ought we to forbear to do or make Use of what is in it self lawful and good, because of the bad Intentions of others, while we neither approve thereof, nor partake with them therein, which was our very Case in taking the Benefit of that Liberty ; for then we in our Address most plainly asserted our known Principles, contained in our Confession of Faith, and do declare, that accordingly we have ever been opposite to the Projects of dispensing with, and taking off the penal Laws against Papists, albeit thereby our own great Hazard, through the Continuance of no less severe penal Laws, and more rigorous Execution thereof against our selves, was sufficiently obvious to all of us.

But now, Sir, having, blessed be God, Access unto your Highness, and Confidence in your Zeal for the Glory of God, and Good of his Church, on which we intirely rely, we humbly beseech you in the Bowels of Christ, that in Commiseration of this torn and afflicted Church, you will be pleased to take such proper and effectual Methods as God shall direct you unto, for procuring our Deliverance from that Yoke of Prelacy, which being obtruded without, yea, and against the Consent of this Church, and contrary to the Genius of the Nation, neither we nor our Fathers were able to bear, and the Restoration of the Presbyterial Church-government, and of those Ministers yet alive, to their Charges, who were so unjustly thrust from them, and the Settlement of other Presbyterian Ministers, who are or may be hereafter by the respective Flocks orderly called, as being the most promising Remedy against Popery and Slavery, and against the Continuance of our otherwise incurable Distractions ; that all Things being done for the House of the God of Heaven, according to the Commandment of the God of Heaven, this poor Weather-beaten Church may at length, through God's Blessing, arrive at a safe and quiet Harbour, and Purity, Piety, Order, and Unity may yet again flourish amongst us and our Posterity.

In the mean Time, Sir, that God may bless and protect your Highness's Person, and the Person of her Royal Highness your illustrious Consort, and may ever bestow upon you the Counsel of his Spirit, and the Assistance of his Power in all your generous and just Undertakings, especially in what remains to be done for advancing of Christ's Kingdom, and establishing of Truth and Righteousness in these Lands, and in all the Churches abroad, that you may be for ever recorded as the Repairer of the Breach, the Restorer of Paths to dwell in, and crowned with Victory and Glory, shall be the constant and hearty Prayer of,

Subscribed, at the Appointment of a frequent Meeting, Edinburgh, January 1689.
by

May it please your Highness,

Your Highness's most humble, most faithful, and most obedient Servants in Christ.

WHereas King James VII. being a profest Papist, did assume the regal Power, and acted as King, without ever taking the Oath required by Law, whereby the King, at his Access to the Government, is obliged to swear to maintain the Protestant Religion, and to rule the People according to the laudable Laws, and did, by the Advice of wicked and evil Counsellors, invade the fundamental Constitution of this Kingdom, and altered it from a legal limited Monarchy, to an arbitrary despotick Power ; and, in a publick Proclamation, asserted an absolute Power to call, annul and disable all the Laws, particularly arraigning the Laws, establishing the Protestant Religion, and did exerce that Power, to the Subversion of the Protestant Religion, and to the Violation of the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom.

By erecting publick Schools, and Societies of the Jesuits, and not only allowing *Mas*s to be publicly said, but also inverting Protestant Chapels and Churches to publick *Mas*s-houses, contrary to the exprets Laws against saying and hearing of *Mas*s.

By allowing Papish Books to be printed, and dispersed, by a Gift to a Papish Printer, designing him Printer to his Majesty's Household, College and Chapel, contrary to the Laws.

By taking the Children of Protestant Noblemen and Gentlemen, sending and keeping them abroad, to be bred Papists, making great Funds and Dotations to papish Schools and Colleges abroad, bestowing Pensions

ons upon Priests, and perverting Protestants from their Religion by Offers of Places, Preferments and Pensions.

By disarming Protestants, while at the same Time he employed Papists in the Places of greatest Trust, civil and military; such as Chancellor, Secretaries, Privy Counsellors, and Lords of Session, thrusting out Protestants to make Room for Papists, and entrusting the Forts and Magazines of the Kingdom in their Hands.

By imposing Oaths contrary to Law.

By giving Gifts and Grants for exacting Money, without Consent of Parliament, or Convention of Estates.

By levying, or keeping on Foot a standing Army in Time of Peace, without Consent of Parliament, which Army did exact Locality, free and dry Quarters.

By employing the Officers of the Army as Judges through the Kingdom, and imposing them where there were heritable Offices and Jurisdictions, by whom many of the Lieges were put to Death summarily, without legal Trial, Jury, or Record.

By imposing exorbitant Fines, to the Value of the Parties Estates, exacting extravagant Bail, and disposing Fines and Forfeitures before any Process or Conviction.

By imprisoning Persons without expressing the Reason, and delaying to put them to Trial.

By causing pursue and forfeit several Persons upon Stretches of old and obsolete Laws; upon frivolous and weak Pretences, upon lame and defective Probations; as particularly the late Earl of Argyle, to the Scandal and Reproach of the Justice of the Nation.

By subverting the Right of the Royal Burghs, the third Estate of Parliament, imposing upon them not only Magistrates, but also the whole Town-council and Clerks, contrary to their Liberties, and express Charters, without the Pretence either of Sentence, Surrender, or Consent, so that the Commissioners to Parliaments being chosen by the Magistrates and Council, the King might in effect as well nominate that entire Estate of Parliament; and many of the said Magistrates put in by him were avowed Papists, and the Burghs were forced to pay Money for the Letters imposing these illegal Magistrates and Councils upon them.

By sending Letters to the chief Court of Justice, not only ordaining the Judges to stop and desist sine die to determine Causes; but also ordering and commanding them how to proceed in Cases depending before them, contrary to the express Laws; and by changing the Nature of the Judges Gifts ad vitam aut culpam, and giving them Commissions ad beneplacitum, to dispose them to Compliance with arbitrary Courses, and turning them out of their Offices when they did not comply.

By granting personal Protections for civil Debts, contrary to Law.

All which are utterly and directly contrary to the known Laws, Statutes and Freedoms of this Realm:

Therefore the Estates of the Kingdom of Scotland, find and declare, that King James VII. being a profest Papist, did assume the regal Power, and acted as King, without ever taking the Oath required by Law, and hath, by the Advice of evil and wicked Counsellors, invaded the fundamental Constitution of the Kingdom, and altered it from a legal limited Monarchy, to an arbitrary despotick Power, and hath exercised the same to the Subversion of the Protestant Religion, and the Violation of the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom, inverting all the Ends of Government; whereby he hath forfeited the Right to the Crown, and the Throne is become vacant.

And whereas his Royal Highness, William, then Prince of Orange, now King of England, whom it hath pleased almighty God to make the glorious Instrument of delivering these Kingdoms from Papery and arbitrary Power, did, by the Advice of several Lords and Gentlemen of this Nation, at London for the Time; call the Estates of this Kingdom to meet the Fourteenth of March last, in order to such an Establishment, as that their Religion, Laws, and Liberties, might not be again in Danger of being subverted; and the said Estates, being now assembled in a full and free Representative of this Nation, taking to their most serious Consideration the best Means for attaining the Ends aforesaid, do, in the first Place; as their Ancestors in the like Cases have usually done, for the vindicating and asserting their ancient Rights and Liberties, declare.

That by the Law of this Kingdom, no Papist can be King or Queen of this Realm, nor bear any Office whatsoever therein; nor can any Protestant Successor exercise the regal Power, until he or she swear the Coronation Oath.

That all Proclamations asserting an absolute Power, to cass, anul, and disable Laws, the erecting Schools and Colleges for Jesuits, the inverting Protestant Chapels and Churches to publick Mass-houses, and the allowing Mass to be said, are contrary to Law.

That the allowing Papish Books to be printed and dispersed, is contrary to Law.

That the taking the Children of Noblemen, Gentlemen and others, sending and keeping them abroad to be bred Papists, the making Funds and Dotations to Papish Schools and Colleges, the bestowing Pensions on Priests, and the perverting Protestants from their Religion, by Offers of Places, Preferments, and Pensions, are contrary to Law.

That the disarming of Protestants, and employing Papists in the Places of greatest Trust; both civil and military, the thrusting out Protestants, to make Room for Papists, and the intrusting Papists with the Forts and Magazines of the Kingdom, are contrary to Law.

That the fining Husbands for their Wives withdrawing from the Church, was contrary to Law.

That Prelacy, and the Superiority of any Office in the Church above Presbyters, is and hath been a great and insupportable Grievance and Trouble to this Nation, and contrary to the Inclinations of the Generality of the People, ever since the Reformation, (they having reformed from Popery by Presbyters) and therefore ought to be abolished.

To which Demand of their Rights, and redressing of their Grievances, they are particularly encouraged by his Majesty the King of England his Declaration for the Kingdom of Scotland, of the Day of October last, as being the only Means for obtaining a full Redress and Remedy therein.

Having therefore an entire Confidence, that his said Majesty the King of England, will perfect the Deliverance so far advanced by him, and will still preserve them from the Violation of their Rights which they have here asserted, and from all other Attempts upon their Religion, Laws and Liberties.

Act abolishing Prelacy, July 22. 1689. N<sup>o</sup>. CLV.

Whereas the Estates of this Kingdom, in their Claim of Right, of the 11 of April last, declared, that Prelacy, and the Superiority of any Office in the Church, above Presbyters, is, and hath been a great and insupportable Grievance to this Nation, and contrary to the Inclination of the Generality of the People, ever since the Reformation, they having reformed from Popery by Presbyters, and therefore ought to be abolished: Our sovereign Lord and Lady, the King and Queen's Majesties, with Advice and Consent of the Estates of Parliament, do hereby abolish Prelacy, and all Superiority of any Office in the Church in this Kingdom, above Presbyters; and hereby rescind, cass and anul the first Act of the second Session of the first Parliament of King Charles II. and the second Act of the third Session of the first Parliament of King Charles II. and all other Acts, Statutes, and Constitutions, in so far alienarly as they are inconsistent with this Act, and do establish Prelacy, or the Superiority of Church-officers, above Presbyters: And the King and Queen's Majesties do declare, that they, with Advice and Consent of the Estates of this Parliament, will settle by Law that Church-government in this Kingdom, which is most agreeable to the Inclinations of the People.

THe King and Queen's Majesties considering, that the Estates of this Kingdom have, by their Vote, declared their Sense and Opinion, that such as have, in the former evil Government, been grievous to the Nation, or have shewn Disaffection to the happy Change, by the Blessing of God, now brought about, or have been Retarders or Obstrueters of the good Designs of the said Estates, in their Meeting, are not fit to be employed in the Management of the Affairs of this Kingdom, do, with the Advice and Consent of the Estates of Parliament now assembled, statute and ordain, that no Person of whatsoever Rank or Degree, who, in the former evil Government, have been grievous to the Nation, acting in the Ineroachments mentioned in these Articles of the Claim of Right, which are declared to be contrary to Law, or who have shewn Disaffection to the happy Change, by the Blessing of God, now brought about, by acting in opposition thereto, since the Time that the King and Queen now reigning were proclaimed, or who hath been a Retarder and Obstrueter of the good Designs of the said Estates, viz. the securing of the Protestant Religion, the settling the Crown, the establishing the Rights of the Lieges, and the redressing their Grievances, by acting contrary to these good Designs, since the Time that they became publick, by Votes and Acts of the Meeting, be allowed to possess, or be admitted into any publick Trust, Place, or Employment, of whatever Kind, under their Majesties, in this Kingdom.

FOrasmuch as, by an Act of this present Parliament, relative to, and in prosecution of the Claim of Right, Prelacy, and the Superiority of Church-officers, above Presbyters, is abolished, and that many Ministers of the Presbyterian Perswasion, since the First of January, 1661. have been deprived of their Churches, or banished for not conforming to Prelacy, and not complying with the Courses of the Time: Therefore their Majesties, with Advice and Consent of the Estates of Parliament, ordain and appoint, that all those Presbyterian Ministers yet alive, who were thrust from their Charges since the First Day of January, 1661. or banished for not conforming to Prelacy, and not complying with the Courses of the Time, have forthwith free Access to their Churches, that they may presently exercise the Ministry in these Parishes, without any new Call thereto; and allow them to bruik and enjoy the Benefices and Stipends thereunto belonging, and that for the whole Crop 1689. and immediately to enter to the Churches and Manfes, where the Churches are vacant, and where they are not vacant, then their Entry thereto is declared to be to the Half of the Benefice and Stipend, due and payable at Michaelmas last, for the half Year immediately preceeding, betwixt Whitsunday and Michaelmas; declaring that the present Incumbent shall have Right to the other Half of the Stipend and Benefice, payable for the Whitsunday last bypast: And to the effect that these Ministers may meet with no Stop or Hindrance, in entring immediately to their Charges, the present Incumbents in such Churches, are hereby appointed, upon Intimation hereof, to desist from their Ministry in these Parishes, and to remove themselves from the Manfes and Glebes thereunto belonging, betwixt and Whitsunday next to come, that the Presbyterian Ministers formerly put out, may enter peaceably thereto; and appoint the Privy Council to see this Act put to Execution. Extracted forth of the Records of Council, by me

Our sovereign Lord and Lady, the King and Queen's Majesties, and Three Estates of Parliament, conceiving it to be their bound Duty, after the great Deliverance that God hath lately wrought for this Church and Kingdom, in the first Place, to settle and secure therein the true Protestant Religion, according to the Truth of God's Word, as it hath of a long Time been professed within this Land; as also the Government of Christ's Church within this Nation, agreeable to the Word of God, and most conducive to the Advancement of true Piety and Godliness and the establishing of Peace and Tranquillity within this Realm; and that by an Article of the Claim of Right, it is declared, that Prelacy, and the Superiority of any Office in the Church, above Presbyters, is and hath been a great and insupportable Grievance and Trouble to this Nation, and contrary to the Inclinations of the Generality of the People, ever since the Reformation, (they having reformed from Popery by Presbyters) and therefore ought to be abolished; likeas, by an Act of the last Session of this Parliament, Prelacy is abolished: Therefore their Majesties, with Advice and Consent of the said Three Estates, do hereby revive, ratify, and perpetually confirm all Laws, Statutes, and Acts of Parliament, made against Popery and Papists, and for the Maintenance and Preservation of the true reformed Protestant Religion, and for the true Church of Christ within this Kingdom, in so far as they confirm the same, or are made in favours thereof. Likeas, they, by these Presents, ratify and establish the Confession of Faith now read in their Presence, and voted and approved by them, as the publick and avowed Confession of this Church, containing the Sum and Substance of the Doctrine of the Reformed Churches; which Confession of Faith is subjoyned to this present Act. As also, they do establish, ratify, and confirm the Presbyterian Church-government and Discipline, that is to say, the Government of the Church by Kirk-sessions, Presbyteries, provincial Synods, and general Assemblies, ratified and established by the 114 Act, Jam. VI. Parl. 12. anno 1592. intituled, Ratification of the Liberty of the true Kirk, &c. and thereafter received by the general Consent of this Nation, to be the only Government of Christ's Church, within this Kingdom; reviving, renewing, and confirming the foresaid Act of Parliament, in the whole Heads thereof, except that Part of it relating to Patronages, which is hereafter to be taken into Consideration; and rescinding, annulling, and making void the Acts of Parliament following, viz. Act anent Restitution of Bishops, Jam. VI. Parl. 18. Cap. 2. Act ratifying the Acts of the Assembly, 1610. Jam. VI. Parl. 21. Cap. 1. Act anent the Election of Archbishops and Bishops, Jam. VI. Parl. 22. Cap. 1. Act intituled, Ratification of the Five Articles of the general Assembly at Perth, Jam. VI. Parl. 23. Cap. 1. Act intituled, For the Restitution and Re-establishment of the ancient Government of the Church, by Archbishops and Bishops, Char. II. Parl. 1. Sess. 2. Act 1. Act anent the Constitution of a national Synod, Char. II. Parl. 1. Sess. 3. Act 5. Act against such as refuse to depone against Delinquents, Char. II. Parl. 2. Sess. 2. Act 2. Act intituled, Act acknowledging and asserting the Right of Succession to the imperial Crown of Scotland, Char. II. Parl. 3. Act 2. Act intituled, Act anent Religion and the Test, Char. II. Parl. 3. Act 6. with all other Acts, Laws, Statutes, Ordinances and Proclamations, and that in so far alienarly as the said Acts and others, generally and particularly abovementioned, are contrary or prejudicial to, inconsistent with, or derogatory from the Protestant Religion, and Presbyterian Government now established; and allowing and declaring, that the Church-government be established in the Hands of, and exercised by these Presbyterian Ministers, who were outed since the First of January, 1661. for Nonconformity to Prelacy, or not complying with the Courses of the Time, and are now restored by the late Act of Parliament; and such Ministers and Elders only as they have admitted or received, or shall hereafter admit or receive: And also, that all the said Presbyterian Ministers have, and shall have Right to the Maintenance, Rights, and other Privileges, by Law provided, to the Ministers of Christ's Church within this Kingdom, as they are, or shall be legally admitted to particular Churches. Likeas, in pursuance of the Premises, their Majesties do hereby appoint the first Meeting of the general Assembly of this Church, as above established, to be at Edinburgh, the third Thursday of October next to come, in this instant Year, 1690. And because many conform Ministers, either have deserted, or were removed from Preaching in their Churches, preceeding the 13 Day of April, 1689. and others were deprived for not giving Obedience to the Act of the Estates, made the said 13 of April, 1689. intituled, Proclamation against the owning of the late King JAMES, and appointing publick Prayers for King William and Queen Mary: Therefore their Majesties, with Advice and Consent foresaid, do hereby declare all the Churches, either deserted, or from which the conform Ministers were removed or deprived, as said is, to be vacant, and that the Presbyterian Ministers exercising their Ministry, within any of these Parishes, (or where the last Incumbent is dead) by the Desire or Consent of the Parish, shall continue their Possession, and have Right to the Benefices and Stipends, according to their Entry in the Year 1689. and in Time coming, ay and while the Church, as now established, take further Course therewith. And to the effect the Disorders that have happened in this Church may be redressed, their Majesties, with Advice and Consent foresaid, do hereby allow the general Meeting and Representatives of the foresaid Presbyterian Ministers and Elders, in whose Hands the Exercise of the Church Government is established, either by themselves, or by such Ministers and Elders, as shall be appointed and authorized Visitors by them, according to the Custom and Practice of Presbyterian Government throughout the whole Kingdom, and several Parts thereof, to try and purge out all insufficient, negligent, scandalous and erroneous Ministers, by due Course of ecclesiastical Process, and Censures; and likewise, for redressing all other Church-disorders; and further, it is hereby provided, that whatsoever Minister, being convened before the said general Meeting, and Representatives of the Presbyterian Ministers and Elders, or the Visitors to be appointed by them, shall either prove contumacious in not appearing, or be found guilty, and shall be therefore censured, whether by Suspension, or Deposition, they shall ipso facto be suspended from, or deprived of their Stipends and Benefices. And ordain this Act to be printed and published. Extracted forth of the Records of Parliament, by me

Reasons for rescinding the Forfeitures. N<sup>o</sup>. CLIX.

THE Persons forfeited, with the Heirs of such as are deceased, and were forfeited during the Two last Reigns, specially since the first of January 1665. do humbly crave, that a general Act may be past rescinding their Forfeitures, for the Reasons following, viz.

1st. Because it is evident by his Majesty's Declaration, while Prince of Orange, for the Kingdom of Scotland, that the Oppressions, and violent Persecutions which these Persons suffered, as well after as before their Forfeitures, are there set down amongst the principal Motives that induced his Majesty to undertake for the Relief of this Kingdom; and that his said Undertaking was accounted, by all good Men, no less just and generous, than its Success was happy and glorious.

2<sup>dly</sup>. Because it is no less manifest, that the greater Part of the Articles of the Declaration of the Estates against King James, such as the imposing of Oaths contrary to Law, the Oppression of a standing Army in Time of Peace, the imposing of exorbitant Fines, the imprisoning Persons without expressing the Reason, the employing the Officers of the Army as Judges, with their summar Executions, and the like, were but Continuations of what was begun in the preceeding Reign; and that the Claim of Right adding thereto many more Particulars chiefly ascribable to that Reign, such as the forcing Men to depone in capital Crimes against themselves, the Abuse of Torture, the sending of an Army upon any Part of the Kingdom in an hostile Manner in Time of Peace, the charging the Lieges with Lawborrowes at the King's Instance, the imposing of Bonds without Authority of Parliament, the putting of Garisons in private Mens Houses, the fining Husbands for their Wives, the Imprisoning and Persecution of Persons for petitioning the King, doth plainly hold forth, that both the Reigns were arbitrary and oppressive, so that to declare King James to have forfeit the Right to the Crown for the abovementioned Causes, and all other Particulars above set down, to be contrary to Law; and yet not to restore the Persons who suffered thereby, and the saddest Part of whose Sufferings it was to be made mad by the said Oppressions, and forced to the Extremity of rising in Arms, would be very inconsequent.

3<sup>dly</sup>. Because the Relief of those thus oppressed, and thereby forced to rise in Arms, being really intended, to think to effeuate the same by Reductions upon Specialities, is neither advisable nor practicable, as may easily appear by what follows.

4<sup>thly</sup>. Because the Persons forfeited, and now expecting to be restored, are above five hundred, and all the Specialities that can be found by the greatest Stretch of the most subtle Invention, will not afford Relief to Fifty of the said Five hundred; so that above Four hundred and fifty, and these of the poorest and most distressed, must still remain in Misery: Besides, that by the making and allowing of the foresaid Stretches to find out Informalities, the Rules, Forms and Practick of the Court of Justiciary, are like to be rendred uncertain and doubtful; which is of far more dangerous Consequence, than any Inconvenience that can be justly apprehended from a general Act.

5<sup>thly</sup>. Because when the Design is known and manifest, viz. to relieve and restore the foresaid Persons forfeited, to go about to do the same under the Colour of Informalities, which can reach but a few, and the greater Part of these few very lamely and constrainedly, is but to expose both the Justice and Prudence of the Kingdom, unless at the same Time the Righteousness of these Reductions be, by a general Act, fairly owned and declared.

6<sup>thly</sup>. Because it is well known, that the first Appearance of his Majesty, when Prince of Orange, for our Relief and Deliverance, was Light and Joy, and as Life from the Dead to all these afflicted Persons; and that in effect they still are, and will perpetually prove the Persons most true and faithful to his Majesty, whereas their former Persecutors did then sink into Grief and Despondency, so that it cannot be thought, that any true Friend to King William will now offer to oppose these poor Mens Restitution.

But the great and common Objection, is, to restore Persons who were forfeited for rising in Arms upon necessary standing Laws, and clear and evident Probation, were to lay down the worst of Preparatives to encourage Rebellions for the future.

To which it is answered, 1st. That it is earnestly wished that the Persons that make this Objection may be well considered, whether they be biassed by particular Interest, or truly, and at the Bottom Approvers of the late Proceedings against King James.

2<sup>dly</sup>. It is a known Rule, That in Criminals, as to either Condemnations, or Absolutions, Precedents and Examples are of no Force.

3<sup>dly</sup>. That whatever the King and Parliament shall now do, by their sovereign Power, upon Consideration of particular Circumstances as to Things, can never, in Law or Sense, be made a Preparative to hinder the Execution of standing Laws for hereafter; it being most certain, that whenever these Laws shall be transgressed, or contravened, the alledging of Things for a Preparative found by King and Parliament, to be distinguished by their Circumstances, would be of no Force.

4<sup>thly</sup>. As these miserable Attempts at Pentland and Bothwell-bridge were contrary to the standing Law, so it is undeniable, that all the lesser Attempts made throughout the Kingdom, after the Prince of Orange his Arrival into England, against King James, before the Meeting of the Estates, do fall under the same Construction; and that all the Difference, as to this Point, that can be made betwixt them, is, that (blessed be God) these had the far better Success.

5<sup>thly</sup>. As in England they needed not a general Act, so we see, that the late Forfeitures have been reversed and rescinded upon such slender Reasons, that if there had been Need of a general Act, their Parliament had never stood to have past it.

6<sup>thly</sup>. Can any Man alledge, that the rescinding of Forfeitures for these former Insurrections, can be a bad Preparative to encourage Insurrections for the future; but, at the same Time, he must think, that the late great Revolution may likewise be drawn into a far more mischievous Consequence, a Thought which certainly all honest Men must abhor.

And therefore, seeing that the Oppressions of the forfeited Persons are clearly acknowledged by the Claim of Right, their Relief, more than insinuate by his Majesty's Declaration, while Prince of Orange, their Redress expressly assured by the Meeting of the Estates, their Restitution plainly assented to by his Majesty's printed Instructions, the Manner of their Relief by Specialities evidently impracticable and delusive, and that the forfeited Persons themselves cannot fail to be amongst the true Friends to King William, what Reason can be adduced to hinder their Restitution by a general Act? specially seeing, that the alone publishing of this Representation, may, and will undoubtedly cut off the ill Consequence of a supposed Preparative, to the End of the World.

But it is further objected, That, as to many of these Forfeitures, there are Donators, and where Donators are, Forfeitures cannot be rescinded, unless the Donators be particularly called, which at this Time hath been omitted.

To which it is answered, 1st. That if there were any Weight in this Objection, as there is none, it could only be objected with any Probability against the Reductions of particular Forfeitures; but to say, that when the King and Parliament proceed by virtue of their sovereign and legislative Power, to rescind Forfeitures in general, and that in Prosecution of the States Claim of Right, and after their having forfeited the late King James, for the Causes, and in the Manner we have seen, is neither reasonable nor tolerable.

2<sup>dly</sup>. It is denied, that Donators need be called to Reductions of Forfeitures in Parliament, per modum justitie, because in effect, they have no proper Interest, in as much as all their Interest is only founded in the Gift, which is consequential to the Sentence of Forfeiture, and must of Necessity stand or fall as the Sentence is found to be just or unjust: And the Gift being a free Gift of his Majesty, and the King and Parliament together, reviewing the Sentence, whether just or unjust, and his Majesty's Advocate, the proper Contradictor, being always present at such Reductions, to affirm that the Donators must be called to a Cognition of this Nature to be made by King and Parliament, is evidently unnecessary.

3<sup>dly</sup>. The proper Case requiring Donators to be called, is, when either their Gifts are questioned, or there falls in a Competition about them; but to think, that where the Gift is free and gratuitous, as the King's Gifts are, that the King, the Author of the Gift, with the Parliament having the sovereign Authority of the Kingdom, may not review the Sentences upon which these Gifts proceed, is obviously unjust and presumptuous.

4<sup>thly</sup>. Let Search be made into the Records, and it will be found, that this Point was never before controverted, for albeit that it may be found, that sometimes a Donator (and it may be Two cannot be found) hath been called ex superabundanti, and it is like for the particular repeating and stating of his Informations; yet generally it will appear, that to Reductions, per modum justitie, Donators were not called. Nor is there any Ground here to distinguish betwixt Reductions upon the Head of Irrelevancy, and Reductions for Want of due Probation, seeing that on the Part of these that gave Sentence, both are alike unjust. And if it be alleged, that the Donators, in the second Case, should be called because he may supply the Probation; it may be as justly affirmed, that he may be called in the first, because he may add to the Accusation, which yet is by all denied; but the true Reason of the Parliament's Practice in this Case, is, because that Donators have only gratuitous Gifts; and as the King is their Author, so the King and Parliament have the sovereign Power, and only proper Interests to re-examine all such Sentences, they being only pronounced at the King's Advocate's Instance, and the Authority of the Parliament supplying all Defects.

But 5<sup>thly</sup>. To put this Question out of Doubt, the Records of Parliament do afford plain, and almost parallel Instances to the Case in Hand, that our Parliaments have rescinded Forfeitures without calling the Donators, and that by a general Act, where the Case appears to be rather less favourable, as may be clearly seen in the Instance of that general Reduction of Forfeitures that was in the Year 1585. and in many other Instances extant in the Records of Parliament.

There is another Question here moved, whether Transactions and Compositions, made by the Persons forfeited, or their Friends for them, with their Donators, can be declared void, and the Sums paid, or agreed to be paid in Composition, ordained to be restored; and some incline to think that this cannot be, in respect that here is a Transaction which is an express Bargain on the account of the Hazard, and the Faith of such Transactions is so established by Law, that they cannot be called in question: But on the other Hand it is to be considered, that the Difference of Transactions from other Bargains, is, that by a Transaction some Thing doubtful and litigious betwixt Two Parties is agreed, and the Pretence of the one Party remitted or discharged for some Consideration to be given by the other, which being a Method and Expedient to terminate and put an End to Pleas, the Law has been more careful to preserve and establish such Agreements: But by this it also plainly appears, that the Bargains and Compositions made with Donators, were, in effect, no Transactions, but plain Bargains of Purchase; for there being neither res, nor lis dubia in the Case, both the Sentence and Gift of Forfeiture being clear according to the Law for the Time, it is evident, that the Bargains that the Donators made, were direct Bargains of Sale, for as high a Price as they could get; and that they were alike ready to make over their Gifts, either to the forfeited Persons, or to Strangers, which of them did bid most; so that if they sold these Estates within the Worth, it was not on the account of any Pretension the Buyer might have, either to the Estate or the Price of it, but merely from the common animus, and Uncertainty of all Forfeitures, which made them content to take what they could get from any Hand whatsoever. 2<sup>dly</sup>. This may be yet farther cleared, if the Case be put to the Donators selling and disposing upon a forfeit Estate to a Stranger, in which Case it cannot be questioned, but if the Forfeiture came to be reduced, the Person forfeited would be reposed to his Estate, and the Stranger Purchaser have Recourse, upon his Warrantice, against the Donator: How then the forfeit Person, or his Friends Purchase should be thought, in this Point, to differ from the Purchase of a Stranger, is evidently inconceivable: It is granted, if the Bargain had been expressly made with this Condition, that no Event or Revolution, though reducing the Forfeiture, should give Ground of Repetition, that then Condition should be kept, the Bargain, in this Case, being a plain Bargain of Hazard, as of a jactus retis, or the like: But then, what Composition in Scotland, whether with Friend or Stranger, was so concluded? 2<sup>dly</sup>. Suppose a Bargain had been so made, yet it must be fairly and honestly made, without Fear, Force, or Concussion, which leads to a Third Argument, viz.

3dly. Etio. That the Compositions for Forfeitures had been made upon these express Terms, (as yet we know none in Scotland were) that the Parties forfeited should not repete their Money, tho' the Forfeiture should come to be reduced, yet even in this Case, if this Bargain was agreed to out of extreme Necessity, the Party forfeited having no other Remedy to prevent the starving and ruining of himself and his Family, can any rational Man deny, but that this Extremity going over by a happy Change of Times, the Person who was thereby forced should be relieved of his Bargain, and repaid against it? But so it is, that this is directly our present Case, it being undeniable that the forfeit Persons or their Friends, who of late composed for their Estates with Donators, did do it merely for preventing the utter Ruin of themselves, their Families and Creditors, for being pressed with the Severity of a Forfeiture and rigid Donator, that left them nothing, what stronger Fear Force, and Concussion could Men be under? So that if Law restore against Bargains made through Fear and Force, as we know it doth, certainly Restitution in the Case in hand is the most just that ever was heard of, specially if it be considered, that this Restitution is demanded from King and Parliament, whose sovereign Power may, and ought in Equity to grant it, tho', in the strict Law, it were more doubtful, as indeed it is not.

4thly. Not to mention how at this Time the whole Kingdom is most happily relieved and discharged of Bonds and Subscriptions, and even of Oaths (which in Law are more binding than Transactions) to men only imposed, tho' by a Necessity far inferior to that whereby these Compositions were extorted, do we not see how, that by the Act, Debitor and Creditor 1661. the Faith of private Bonds was upon, for less Considerations, altered and superseded, and even express Bargains, concerning proper Wadsets, clearly innovate, and Renunciations upon Agreement discharged. If then the Parliament did, at that Time think fit, upon bare Reasons of Convenience, to make such Stretches upon private Bargains fairly concluded, can any rational Man think, that Compositions so visibly extorted upon such unjust Grounds, as the late Forfeitures were, should now be sustained?

5thly. Was it not upon this most just Consideration, that his Majesty, in his printed Instructions, allows his Consent to be given to what the Parliament should propose for Restitution to be made of Fines, or Compositions for Fines or Forfeitures, from those who had the Benefit of them, so that indeed it may justly be wondred, how that after the Oppressions we have seen, and the Force that Men have been laid under to redeem their Estates from them, by giving often more than the Half to such as assisted to spoil them, any should have the Confidence, either to call such Compositions legal Transactions, or to plead, that they ought still to be regarded as binding, specially after that his Majesty hath so clearly declared himself in this Point.

But 6thly, and lastly. And for Superabundance, it is certain, that, in many Cases, the Donators did compound or sell the Estates forfeited without any Consent of the Party forfeited. And further it might appear, in some Cases, that Men did always refuse to consent to the Bargain, so that, to allege a Transaction in these Cases, to bar them, or their Friends from Repetition, were most absurd.

In respect whereof the general Act ought to pass, as it is conceived, and unanimously voted by the Committee of Parliament.

Declaring this present Act as sufficient to all Parties concerned, as if the said Sentences of Forfeitures and Hornings, with the said Charters, Dispositions, and other Rights and Titles whatsoever, with the Decrees and Sentences following thereupon, were specially and orderly retreated and reduced, and as all Parties having Interest had been specially called thereto. Likeas, their Majesties, and Three Estates, rehabilitate, reintegrate, and restore so many of the said Persons as are living, and the Memory of them who are decest, their Heirs Successors, and Posterity, to their Goods, Fame, and worldly Honour, and to use all lawful Acts and Deeds in Judgment and outwith the same, and to all and sundry their Lands, Heritages Tacks, Steadings, Debts and Possessions whatsoever, which they, or any of them had the Time of the leading of the said Process against them. Declaring always hereby, that where the Debtors of the forfeit Persons have made Payment bona fide, upon Distress, to Donators, or others having Right from them; such Debtors are hereby fully exonerated and discharged, allowing to the Party forfeited, Recourse against the Donator alienarly. And also, their Majesties and Three Estates, decern and declare. That the Children of the Persons forfeited since the said first Day of January, One thousand six hundred sixty five, are, and shall be habil to enjoy, brulk, and claim all Rights pertaining, or that may righteously pertain to them; and that all the Deeds granted by any of the Persons forfeited, to any others of their Estate, real or personal, or any Part thereof, be as valid as if they had not incurred the said Sentences. Declaring it lawful to the Persons forfeited, and their Children, to succeed to their Predecessors by Brieves or otherwise, notwithstanding of the said Dooms of Forfeiture which are hereby ordained to be buried in perpetual Oblivion. And further, their Majesties and three Estates, ordain the Persons forfeited, and the Heirs of them who are decest, to be fully repossessed to their Lands, Teinds, Heritages, Tacks, or Possessions, whereof they or their Predecessors were in Possession, the Time when they were challenged for the Deeds whereupon the Forfeitures followed, with full Right and Access to all Bygones since the Term of Martinas 1688. inclusive, with all other Bygones yet resting unplifted in the Tenants Hunds: As likewise, to all Bygones whatsoever, intromitted with by any Donator or his Assignes, in the Case of special Reasons, and Acts to be past thereanent, in Manner aftermentioned. Likeas, their Majesties, with Advice and Consent of the said Estates, do discharge all Fines yet unpaid, which were imposed by Sentences from the first of January, One thousand six hundred sixty five, to the fifth of November, One thousand six hundred eighty eight, upon any Person or Persons for Church-irregularities, or Nonconformities, or refusing of publick Bonds, Subscriptions and Oaths, or for not obeying Acts, Proclamations, or Orders thereanent, resetting of, or conversing with Rebels, for the Causes foresaid, refusing to depone on Libels against themselves, in capital Cases, albeit restricted to arbitrary Punishment, and any Bonds granted for these Fines, with all Hornings, Denunciations, and Intercommunings, given, pronounced, and issued forth in Parliament, or by any other Court or Commission, against any Persons for the said Causes: And remit to the Commission appointed by this Act to consider the Grounds of Repetition of such of the said Fines as are already paid to Donators, or others having Right from them, and other private Parties. And it is hereby declared, that it shall be leifum to any of the said Persons, or Parties forfeited, who are hereby restered, who have componed either by themselves or others, with any Donators, or others for their Forfeitures, or Escheats following upon the Grounds of the said Forfeitures, to repete from the said Donators, and others, and their Heirs and Successors, all and whatsoever Sums of Money paid for the said Compositions, and that all Bonds and other Securities given for Payment of the said Compositions for Forfeitures, and Escheats following on the Grounds thereof, and not yet paid, nor the Sums unplifted, are, and shall be for hereafter null and void; excepting always herefrom, the Bond granted by James Weir, and others, to the Earl of Airly, for a Competition of the said James Weir his Forfeiture, to which Bond the Lord Rutherford has Right, without Prejudice to the* forfeited Person Debtor in the Bond, to have Repetition and Recourse against the Donator, or any Assigny from him, without onerous Causes. And their Majesties, with Consent foresaid, declare, that the said Donators, and others, and their foresaids, are, and shall be liable to refund the said Sums so paid, and give back the said Bonds and Securities to the Parties concerned; declaring likewise, all Rights of such Persons, who have componed and acquired Rights of Forfeiture, Fines, Escheats, and others foresaid, by Warrant, and Commission from, and to the Behoof of the Persons forfeited, fined, or denounced, or their apparent Heirs, or nearest of Kin, or by Warrant and Commission of the Relations or Minors, for their Behoofs, to be good and valid: Which Persons are hereby understood, not to be defrauded of the Money laid out by them, but are to be paid with Deduction of their Intrusions, and are to retain the Rights acquired by them, for Security thereof, they always restricting their Possession, by virtue of the same, to the Payment of the Annualrents of the said Compositions. And because there is no Reason, that the foresaid Persons forfeited, and thereby dispossessed of their Estates, should be liable to pay Annualrents to their Creditors; during their being dispossessed (excepting always such Persons as, upon special Acts, shall obtain Repetition of their bygone Rents,) therefore their Majesties, with Consent foresaid, do remit to the Commission appointed by this Act, to consider how far the said forfeited Persons ought to be liberated of their bygone Annualrents, during the Time foresaid. As also, if their Cautioners, who were not forfeited, ought to be liberate of the said Annualrents at the Hands of the Creditors, and what Time hereafter shall be allowed to the said forfeited Persons and their Cautioners, for making Payment of the principal Sums, and bygone Annualrents, during which Time, Diligence, at the Instance of the Creditors, is to be superseded, and if the Diligence to be superseded shall be only personal. Moreover, their Majesties, and Estates of Parliament, by their Presents, freely remit and discharge all Unlaws, Penalties and Escheats, adjudged in the Justice-court, or other Courts, and all Sums of Money that may be asked for Contravention of any Bond or Act, on the Accounts abovementioned, made to the Two late Kings, since the said first Day of January, 1665. either from the Principals, or their Cautioners, which are yet resting unuplifted. And seeing many of the Lieges were spoiled and plundered without any previous Sentence, and Bonds and other Rights were extorted, or exacted from them through Fear and Terror, their Majesties, with Advice and Consent foresaid, ordain the Creditors, or others having Right, to deliver up to the Debtors, all Bonds, and other Rights extorted or exacted upon the Accounts foresaid, and where the Bonds are registered, to grant Discharges thereof, bearing a Clause of Registration, and that betwixt and the first of November next, under the Pain of the Double of the Penalty in the Bond, to be decerned against them without any Modification, in case the Bonds be found to have been extorted, or exacted in Manner foresaid, and insisted for, or not delivered up to the Debtors therein. And likewise ordain the Clerks of the Privy Council, and the Clerks of any other Courts, general Receivers, and others who have in their Hands, Bonds which were extorted, or exacted on the Accounts foresaid, to deliver up the same to the Debtors, if they be required; and allow the foresaid Persons spoiled and plundered, to pursue for Repetition of the Damages and Spoils on the Accounts foresaid, for which Bonds were not granted, either before the Commission appointed by this Act, or the Judge ordinary, as they please; and appoint the Lords of Session, upon probable Grounds, to grant Suspension of any Charges to be given on the foresaid Bonds, without Caution or Confignation, and that gratis without Payment of any Dues. And their Majesties, and Estates of Parliament, being willing that this present Act be inviolably and irrevocably kept, ordain the same, and whole Clauses thereof, to be interpret by all Judges and Ministers of the Law, in the most extensive Sense and Construction the Words can bear, in favours of the Persons forfeited, fined, denounced, or otherwise lesed, as said is. And forasmuch as, since the intenting of the said Processes of Forfeitures and Fines, and since the Denunciation of some of the said Persons to the Horn, or their being charged upon Bonds to enter in Ward, or to depart off the Realm, or that, for other necessary and probable Causes, they were absent, or forth of the Realm, and had not free Access to compare for Pursuit and Defence of their Actions, sundry Processes are led, and Decrees given, and other Proceedings had not only against themselves, but also against the Minors, who were in their Tutory and Curatory, to their great Prejudice and Hurt; therefore their Majesties, and Estates of Parliament, for Remedy thereof, do hereby repon the said Persons to their lawful Defences, and do allow the Probability and Necessity of their said Absence to be tried, either by way of Suspension, Exception, or Reply in the first Instance, but any further Process, Nonsummons of Reduction, and also for Reparation of Losses sustained by falling, or running of Wards, Nonentries, and other Casualties, or of shorter Prescriptions, through Absence of the Persons when forced, by the Severities foresaid, to flee the Country and withdraw. Their Majesties, with Advice and Consent foresaid, hereby repon and restore them against such Casualties, fallen during their Absence, which they might have prevented, if they had been present, declaring, that as to Casualties fallen before their Absence, the Years of their Absence shall be discounted, both as to the Casualties, and as to the said shorter Prescriptions. Attour their Majesties considering, that the Wives, or Relicts of several of the Persons abovementioned, who had Right to the Joyntures out of their Husbands Estates, were prevailed upon, by Donators and others, in respect they wanted Confirmations, to assign and make over their Joyntures to, and in favours of the said Donators, and others deriving Right from them, upon their getting Security for a lesser Liferent out of their Husbands Estates from the Donators, and others having Right from them, or in regard foresaid, for some other Cause no ways adequate to the Value of their Liferent, therefore their Majesties, with Advice and Consent foresaid, declare all such Bargains void and null, and hereby repon and restore the Relicts to their former Joyntures, assigned and made over, as said is, they always refunding to the Donators, and others deriving Right from them, after Count and Reckoning, whatever was given them in lieu of their said Joyntures. And it is hereby declared, that this present Act shall be as valid, and effectual to all others therwise lesed, in manner, and upon the Grounds foresaid, in the Reign of King Charles II. before the Year 1665. to bring in their Processes, or particular Acts before the Parliament, or such as they shall appoint for that effect, and to crave and receive Redresses according to the Merit of their Causes, as accords of the Law; and further, but Prejudice of any of the Persons particularly or generally abovementioned, who are restored restored by this present Act, to bring in particular Acts of Parliament, rescinding the Decrees of Forfeiture past against them upon such special Grounds of Nullities and Injustice as they can instruct, and that both as they shall appoint for that Effect. And their Majesties, with Advice and Consent of the said Estates, do hereby dissolve from the Crown and Patrimony thereof, any of the Estates belonging to the said Estate and Restoration of Persons forfeited and fined, whether here specially insert, or not; and for the Repetition of Compositions and Sums of Money paid by them, or by any others their Majesties Lieges, as aforesaid. And to the effect that all, to whom the Benefit of this Act is competent, and who find it necessary for them to apply, may have the Benefit thereof applied to them; as also, that the Claims and Pretences of all Donators and their singular Successors, for cnerous Causes, may be cognosed upon, tried, discuss and determined in Parliament, their Majesties, with special Advice and Consent of the Three Estates, do nominate and appoint the Persons after named, as a Commission of Parliament, viz. The Earls of Crawford, Mortoun and Levin, the Viscount of Kinnure, the Lords Carmichael and Ruthven, Sir Robert Sinclair of Stevenston, William Macdowal of Garthland, Thomas Dunbar of Grange, Duncan Forbes of Colinton, John Dempster of Pitliver, and Hugh Macgussock of Rusko, Sir John Hall Lord Provost of Edinburgh, Alexander Spittle of Leuchat Commissioner for Innerkerthing, Mr. James Smallem Commissioner for Dumbarton, Mr. Robert Cleland Commissioner for Anstruther-vester, Mr. John Boswel for Sanquhar, and Sir William Hamilton Commissioner for the Queensferry, to meet at the high Town Council-house of Edinburgh, the first Tuesday after the Adjournment of this Session of Parliament, at Ten a Clock in the Forenoon, and thereafter upon such Days, and at such Times as they shall think fit to appoint, and any seven of them to be a Quorum, with full Power to the said Commission, or their Quorum, to receive the Claims and Allegiances of all Persons, to whom the Benefit of this Act is competent, or who may be otherwise therein concerned, and upon Citation of all Parties having Interest therein, to hear and discuss their Claims and Allegiances, and for that effect to issue Citations, and to take all Trial for verifying the said Claims, and to prepare and report their Judgment thereanent, to the next Session of this, or any other ensuing Parliament. And specially, but Prejudice of the Generality foresaid, their Majesties, with Consent foresaid, do remit to them to consider the Cases aftermentioned, viz. Of Mr. Francis Montgomery of Giffan, anent the Lands of Hillhead, of the Laird of Grant, anent the Fine of Brodie of Lethin, of Sir John Hall, anent the Laird of Brody's Fine, of Mr. Roderick Mackenzie younger, Advocate, anent the Forfeiture of Dalvennan, of Charles Oliphant of Langtoun, anent the Forfeiture of Patrick Liltoun, of John Fergusson of Donaldtoun, anent the Forfeiture of Macculloch of Barholm, of the Laird of Orbistoun and William Hamilton of Wisshaw, anent the Forfeiture of Monkland, of Hugh Stevenson, anent the Forfeiture of Montgrenan, the Case of the Earl of Balcarras, anent the refunding of the Composition paid to him for the Forfeiture of Denholm of Westshiels, of the Earl of Glencairn, anent the Forfeitures gifted in his favours, the Case of Andrew Macmillan of Craignel, and his Heirs, against Hugh Wallace of Inghistoun, of Hugh Kennedy younger of Ardmillan, concerning Thomas Fergusson and Captain William Seton, and the Case of John Anderson of Dowhill, anent the Fine of Ten Thousand Merks, which he was necessitate, upon a Sentence, to pay to the Donator, for the Escape of Thomas Blackwell out of the Tolbooth of Glasgow, to hear the Parties concerned, and to report, as said is. Declaring lastly, that this present Act, nor no Part of it shall be any ways invalidate by the Act salvo jure, to be past in this present Parliament.
